PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 81st CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1950

The 27th day of November being the day to which Congress adjourned, under the terms of House Concurrent Resolution 287, adopted September 23, 1950, the Senate reassembled in the old Supreme Court Chamber in the Capitol.

ALBEN W. BARKLEY, of Kentucky, Vice President of the United States, called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee, and worthily magnify Thy holy name: Grant, we beseech Thee, to these chosen servants of the commonwealth clear vision, true insights, and pure hearts as, facing perplexing tasks and great responsibilities, they again ascend this holy hill of the Nation's life. In these fateful days, for whose decisions the future will judge us, by Thine enabling might may we maintain our integrity unsullied by animosities, prejudices, or personal ambitions, regarding always public office as a sacred trust.

Thou who through storm and night art still guiding and guarding, in these perilous times to Thee we cry: God save the state.

We ask it in the name that is above every name. Amen.

STATEHOOD FOR HAWAII AND ALASKA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, November 27, 1950.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
The President of the Senate.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I hope that at this session the Senate will approve the bills now before it for the admission of the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska to the Union as States. These bills, H. R. 49, relating to Hawaii, and H. R. 331, relating to Alaska, were approved by the House of Representatives in March 1950, and reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs on June 29, 1950. They now await final action by the Senate.

Prompt approval of these measures is essential not only to the welfare and security of Hawaii and Alaska, but also to the security of the Nation as a whole.

Since these bills came before the Senate, this country has moved to check aggression in Korea, in support of the principles of the United Nations. As a result, our position in the Pacific area, and our attitude toward the peoples of that area have become of even greater importance to our national security and to the success of our efforts to achieve a just peace.

Both Hawaii and Alaska are vital to the defense of the United States in the Pacific. They are also the proving ground of our democratic institutions in the Pacific area, with tremendous psychological influence on the hearts and minds of the people of Asia and the Pacific islands.

As frontiers of our national territory, Hawaii and Alaska must maintain a high degree of military readiness. The security of our national defense forces there rests upon the wholehearted effort and support of the local population. The morale of the people of Hawaii and Alaska, who are our fellow citizens, will be heightened if we show them that we truly regard them as our equals in the responsibilities and privileges of statehood. Statehood will increase the effectiveness and the vitality of their local governments, and render them better able to back up our Armed Forces.

Furthermore, statehood will mean full participation by the elected representatives from these areas in the work of the Congress. The defense needs and responsibilities of the two Territories will be presented more forcefully by Members of Congress who are entitled to vote. As a result, the Government will be better informed and better able to provide for our national security in the Pacific area.

Statehood will not only strengthen the moral and physical aspects of our national defense in these areas—it will also improve our relations with the other free peoples of the Pacific area, and strike a blow at Communist influence among them. Communism seeks to create distrust of the sincerity of our intentions, particularly among the peoples of the Far East. The granting of statehood to Hawaii and Alaska would speak far louder than words of our devotion to our national ideals. It would show, particularly in the case of Hawaii, that this Government judges people by their deeds, and not by their racial or national origins. It would give additional convincing proof to the people of the Far East that this country is still truly dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

In all fairness, we should not longer deny the desire for statehood of our fellow citizens in Hawaii and Alaska. Unlike our other overseas areas, Hawaii and Alaska are incorporated Territories. Their special legal status has long been regarded by them and by us as the first major step toward statehood. They have asked for statehood. An overwhelming majority of the people of Hawaii voted on November 7 in favor of the adoption of a State constitution. Similarly, the people of Alaska have voted almost 3 to 1 in favor of statehood.

Both areas pay all Federal taxes, although they have no voice in levying them or in the spending of tax revenues. Their young men are inducted into the Armed Forces of the Nation. The people of Hawaii have about five times as many men on the casualty lists from Korea, in proportion to their total population, as the rest of the country.

It is now obvious that the people of both Territories can exercise effectively all the rights of self-government under statehood both in local and national affairs. Having earned these rights and expressed a desire to exercise them, the people of Hawaii and Alaska should be granted them without delay. Our sense of justice and fair play demands it.

For these reasons, I urge that the Senate give the highest priority to the statehood measures before it and complete legislative action on them before the present Congress adjourns.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

A letter from the Administrator, Housing and Home Finance Agency, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the administration of the advance planning program of non-Federal public works (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Public Works.

PROGRESS REPORT BY COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS FILED DURING ADJOURNMENT

Pursuant to the authority of the order of the Senate of September 13, 1950, Mr. MCCLELLAN, on October 12, 1950, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, submitted a progress report (No. 2581) on the recommendations of the Hoover Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government.

REPORTS ON DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, to which were referred for examination and recommendation three lists of records transmitted to the Senate by the Archivist of the United States that appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted reports thereon pursuant to law.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MURRAY:

S. 4194. A bill to amend Public Law 441, 81st Congress, so as to provide for the annual proclamation of National Children's Dental Health Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FREAR:

S. 4195. A bill authorizing the construction of a highway bridge across the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal at Summit, Del.; to the Committee on Public Works.

By Mr. LANGER:

S. 4196. A bill for the relief of Attar Ali and Abarath Ullah; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LEHMAN (for Mr. KEFAUVER):

S. 4197. A bill for the relief of Winifred Margaret Short; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COMMITTEE TO ATTEND MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which relates to the appointment by the President of the Senate of a committee to go to Australia to attend the meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. The Senate adopted a concurrent resolution to take care of this matter at the last session which went to the House, but the House has not yet acted on it. If the House adopts that resolution, the one I am offering today will not have any effect, but in case they should not adopt it, it is our desire that the Senate agree to the resolution I am now submitting, authorizing the sending of a delegation from the Senate, irrespective of the action of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 360) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate is authorized to appoint not more than four Members of the Senate to attend the next general meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association to be held in Australia and to designate the chairman of the delegation to be present at such meeting. The expenses incurred by the members of the delegation and staff appointed for the purpose of carrying out this resolution shall not exceed $10,000 and shall be reimbursed to them from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon submission of vouchers approved by the chairman of the delegation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Texas whether the former resolution, which was in the form of a concurrent resolution, was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations unanimously.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not recall exactly about that but I think so.

Mr. WHERRY. There is an objection to the resolution. A similar resolution passed the Senate before, and it is now in the House, is it?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Was the resolution referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration a year ago for the consideration of the matter of an appropriation?

Mr. CONNALLY. The senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, I understand has passed on the resolution I am referring to, and has approved it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I have conferred with the members of the committee, and there is no objection on their part. I was not present when the other resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator has not conferred with me, but so far as I am concerned, the resolution is perfectly agreeable. I was merely bringing out for the record the fact that the former resolution was considered by the Committee on Rules and Administration. If the Senator from Arizona polled the committee and they are agreeable, there is no objection on my part.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF INVESTIGATION RELATING TO PRODUCTION OF AGRICULTURAL CROPS

Mr. GILLETTE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 361), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolved, That the authority of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, under Senate Resolution 36, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to April 11, 1949, and Senate Resolution 198, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to February 1, 1950 (providing for an investigation with respect to the production of agricultural crops), is hereby continued until February 28, 1951.

INVESTIGATION OF ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN GERMANY AND AUSTRIA

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I am today offering a resolution providing for a complete study and investigation of the administration of justice in the American zones of occupation in Germany and Austria with a view of ascertaining—first, the extent to which persons who are or have been Communists were given responsibility for the policies and administration of justice in such zones; second, the extent to which persons who are or have been Communists were given responsibility for the program for denazification of several million Germans; third, whether or not the activities of such persons were responsible for the moving of many German and Austrian engineers, scientists, and other highly trained men to Russia; and fourth, whether any of the persons now employed by the State Department in connection with the administration of justice in such zones are or have been members of the Communist Party.

The resolution (S. Res. 362) submitted by Mr. LANGER was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of the administration of justice in the American zones of occupation in Germany and Austria with a view to ascertaining (1) the extent to which persons who are or have been Communists were given responsibility for the policies and administration of justice in such zones; (2) the extent of which persons who are or have been Communists were given responsibility for the program for denazification of several million Germans; (3) whether or not the activities of such persons were responsible for the moving of many German and Austrian engineers, scientists, and other highly trained men to Russia; and (4) whether any of the persons now employed by the State Department in connection with the administration of justice in such zones are or have been members of the Communist Party. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations for legislation as it may deem necessary to provide for improvement of the administration of justice in the American zones of occupation in Germany and Austria.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to employ on a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to speak for 3 minutes on the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from North Dakota is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I have just returned from a trip to Austria and Germany. Not going at Government expense, I was free to make my own investigation, and I did so without in any way being obligated to any public official of the United States now serving in either one of these two countries.

My conclusion—with as careful an investigation as I could make with 7 days in Austria and 3 days in Germany—was that if Joe Stalin had had charge of the occupation of Germany in behalf of the United States, he could not have done a better job for Russia than was done by many of the public officials sent there by the United States Government until the appointment of Mr. McCloy as High Commissioner of Germany.

Today I have submitted a resolution asking for a thorough investigation by the Judiciary Committee of the administration of justice in Germany, and of the Communist influence on said administration of justice. I am sure the Senate will want to find out how many Communists, fellow travelers, and members of Communist-front organizations were appointed to administer justice, or to determine the policy of the administration of justice, or actually to take part in some capacity in the administration of justice.

The people of the United States—who have to furnish the boys to fight their battles—will, in my opinion, be horrified at what an impartial investigation such as I have asked for will disclose.

This investigation will show a carefully conceived and flawlessly carried out plan on the part of the Communists to prevent the German people from becoming friendly to the people of the United States, and to keep them from assisting the western forces in time of war and not to take up arms against Communist Russia.

This investigation will disclose that some people in our State Department worked hand in glove with our enemies, the results of which were apparent in the elections held a week ago in Württemberg-Baden and Hessen, and yesterday in Bavaria.

I ask unanimous consent that the article published in the Abendpost, a newspaper of Frankfurt, Germany, giving the results of the elections in Hessen and Württemberg-Baden last Sunday, be inserted at this point in my remarks. I also ask unanimous consent that the English translation may follow the German text.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article and translation were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article which appeared on the front page of the Washington Post this morning entitled "Socialists Win Early Lead in Bavarian Vote," together with the United Press press report giving the results from 371 out of 430 districts in Munich, be inserted at this point in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article and report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOCIALISTS WIN EARLY LEAD IN BAVARIAN VOTE—PARTY IN MUNICH TOPS CHRISTIAN DEMOCRATS 2–1 IN MOST DISTRICTS

MUNICH, GERMANY, November 26.—The Socialist Party, which opposes west German rearmament, jumped off to an early lead in first scattered returns tonight from the Bavarian state election.

The first returns from the Sunday voting were too meager to show a decisive trend, but in this rock-ribbed conservative state ruled by the prorearmament Christian Democrats since the war, any strong Socialist showing would be considered significant.

Bavaria, largest German state in the American occupation zone, elected a new state parliament in a third crucial test of German sentiment toward rearming for defense of western Europe against communism. Early estimates said that about 70 percent of the 6,000,000 eligible voters had cast their ballots, a heavy turnout.

[The United Press reported that results from 371 out of 430 districts in Munich gave the Socialists 138,426 votes; Chancelor Konrad Adenauer's Christian Democrats, 65,185; the Bavarian Party, 53,714; the Free Democrats (FDP), 32,005; Reconstruction Party, 19,997, and Communists, 15,211.]

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I also ask that an article which appeared in the Washington Star today entitled "Bavarian Socialists, Opposing Rearming, Score Big Vote Gains."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BAVARIAN SOCIALISTS OPPOSING REARMING, SCORE BIG VOTE GAINS

MUNICH, GERMANY, November 27.—West Germany's Socialists—bitter opponents of German rearmament for western defense—scored big gains today in Bavarian state elections.

With returns still incomplete, the Socialists were running a strong second to the prorearmanent Christian Democrats in the balloting yesterday for members of the state parliament.

The surprising Socialist showing in this traditionally conservative state was certain to be interpreted as a third protest vote within a week by German voters against rearmament.

REBUFF TO GOVERNMENT

Hesse and Württemberg-Baden rolled up Socialist victories on November 19 in elections widely regarded as a slap at the Christian Democrats, who control the Federal government, for their support of German rearmament.

Federal Chancelor Konrad Adenauer, the Christian Democrats' leader, already has agreed to take west Germany into the projected western defense system. He must obtain approval from the Federal parliament, however.

Bavaria has been a Christian Democratic stronghold since 1946. In the election that year, the party received more than 50 percent of all votes.

This year the Socialists challenged the Christian Democrats in Bavaria solely on the rearmament issue. They argued that the Germans should refuse to take up arms again until they have full independence and enough allied troops in Germany to repel any Soviet attack.

RETURNS TABULATED

The Christian Democrats countered that the danger of Soviet aggression was imminent, and, therefore, Germany should not delay in agreeing to rearm.

At 9:30 a. m. (3:30 a. m. eastern standard time), the still incomplete returns showed this vote:

Christian Democrats, 1,861,455 (29.1 percent of the total).

Socialists, 1,647,537 (25.8).

Bavarian Party (prorearmament), 1,193,899 (18.6).

Refugees (antirearmament, 896,584 (14).

Free Democrats (prorearmament), 418,819 (6.6).

Communists (antirearmament), 93,083 (1.5).

Seven splinter parties had polled about 2 percent of the votes.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that an editorial which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post of November 25, 1950, entitled "Nuremberg Verdicts Cool Ardor of Germany for Defending West," be published at this point in my remarks and call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this editorial was written before the elections, and I state to the Senate that my investigation confirms what the editorial stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NUREMBERG VERDICTS COOL ARDOR OF GERMANY FOR DEFENDING WEST

The wife of one of our younger gauleiters in west Germany recently wrote to her family an account of a meeting of a discussion group of young Germans sponsored by the occupation authorities, apparently for the betterment of relations. The subject for discussion on this occasion was How Can Germany Cooperate in the Defense of the West? To the great surprise of the lady whose letter we saw, the young Germans almost unanimously declared that they wanted no part of defending the west, that the west had hanged Germany's leaders and humiliated the German people and that, until the west made some move to restore German honor, the west could jolly well defend itself. Wrote the gauleiter's wife: "It is discouraging that the Nuremberg trials have had so little effect on the attitude of the Germans."

Actually the Nuremberg trials had a catastrophic effect on the Germans, but not the effect that was supposedly intended. There are plenty of reasons why this is so. For example, the Germans know that, while their leaders were tried for crimes against humanity, including the torture of Germans by Germans, the Soviet Union had probably tortured, imprisoned, and murdered 10 times as many individuals as Hitler did. Nobody was tried for such crimes against humanity as the murder of 4,000 Polish officers in the Katyn Forest. The Germans know that representatives of the nations whose air forces destroyed Dresden, packed with refugees, in a single night, and wiped out two Japanese cities with atomic bombs, undertook to try Germans for causing the destruction of cities, towns, and villages and devastation not justified by military necessity. The Germans might be willing to concede that the bombing of London, Coventry, Lidice, and Rotterdam were crimes against humanity, but they don't see why they were any worse than Berlin, Hiroshima, Hamburg, and Tokyo.

Finally, of course, there is the normal closing of ranks when foreigners undertake to punish a nation's leaders. Millions of Germans forgot how they hated the Nazis when a war-crimes tribunal sat in judgment, not only on the Nazi conspirators but on military commanders, and even on anti-Nazis like Baron Weizsaecker, for years the Allies' contact man in the German Foreign Office, or General von Falkenhausen, who, as military governor in Belgium, saved hundreds from the vengeance of the Nazis.

The task of the victors in Germany, with Russians and German Communists leering at them over the wall, is to undo some of the moral and psychological damage of the Nuremberg trials, most of which resulted from our effort to go beyond the punishment of clear violations of the laws of war into elaborate inventions of war crimes which had no previous legal standing. The belated releases of Weizsaecker and others erroneously convicted should help, but we must expect no miraculous changes in German attitude. Recovery from the effects of Morgenthauism and an unrealistic mixture of morality and vengeance cannot occur in a day. It will come only when, as Ferdinand Eberstadt said in his recent statement, Germany and Japan are restored to positions of respectability and responsibility in the United Nations. This does not imply any revision of our attitude toward nazism or aggression, but rather a better understanding of the facts of international life, with special emphasis on the fact that thousands of American boys will have to go to Europe if Europeans can't be persuaded that it's worth while to defend themselves.

AID FOR FLOOD SUFFERERS IN PROVINCE OF MANITOBA, CANADA—INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT OF CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are a concurrent resolution and two simple resolutions coming over from a former session, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read Senate Concurrent Resolution 89, submitted by Mr. WHERRY on May 16, 1950, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress of the United States that the President should direct the appropriate agencies of the United States to make available immediately the fullest aid consistent with law to the appropriate agencies of the Dominion of Canada in order that the facilities and resources of the United States may assist the Dominion of Canada in giving aid and relief to those suffering as a result of the recent disastrous floods in the Province of Manitoba, and especially in the city of Winnipeg. The physical, financial, and moral support of the United States should be extended to the Canadian people in their hour of need not alone as an act of mercy but as a natural and fitting expression of the historic friendship and kinship of the peoples of the United States and of Canada.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask that the concurrent resolution be indefinitely postponed for there is no further need for such a resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INVESTIGATION OF DISLOYALTY AMONG EMPLOYEES OF GOVERNMENT—INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT OF RESOLUTION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the next resolution coming over.

The legislative clerk read Senate Resolution 312, submitted by Mr. WHERRY on July 20, 1950, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations made pursuant to Senate Resolution 231 (relating to an investigation of disloyalty among employees of the Government) be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the following instructions:

(1) The Committee on Foreign Relations shall conduct a full and complete investigation in accordance with the provisions of Senate Resolution 231; or

(2) In the event said committee decides by a majority vote that a continuation by said committee of such investigation is not in the public interest, the committee shall recommend to the Senate the establishment of a trained bipartisan commission, wholly independent of the executive, to conduct a full, complete, and relentless search into the whole subject of foreign penetration of the Department of State and other agencies of the Government in accordance with the provisions of said Senate Resolution 231.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes that, in the language of Grover Cleveland, this resolution is in a state of innocuous desuetude, and without objection, it will be indefinitely postponed. The Chair hears no objection.

FURTHER DISMANTLING OF GERMAN INDUSTRIAL PLANTS — RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the next resolution coming over.

The legislative clerk read Senate Resolution 324, submitted by Mr. EASTLAND, for himself and Mr. BRIDGES, on August 4, 1950, as follows:

Whereas the outbreak of war in Korea has completely changed the international situation and has confronted the anti-Soviet world with the prospects of a series of new acts of naked aggression; and

Whereas the American people are now asked to make new sacrifices to strengthen the economic, social, political, and military defenses of the anti-Soviet world; and

Whereas such defenses cannot adequately be prepared unless the anti-Soviet world contributes its own full share to this undertaking; and

Whereas the revival of the east German Wehrmacht constitutes the gravest danger to Western Germany; and

Whereas our policies of weakening both the peacetime economic strength and even the military potential necessary to self-defense, of Western Germany, are continuing to play directly into the hands of Russia; and

Whereas economically, Western Germany is burdened with tremendous shortages of peacetime goods together with over 2,000,000 unemployed; and

Whereas, financially, Western Germany is still staggering under an annual one billion deficit in her balance of payments, the cost of which is borne by the American taxpayer; and

Whereas to remedy this dangerous situation, France has offered Germany full partnership in the Schuman plan in order to encourage the full use of the integrated productive capacity of these two nations; and

Whereas 10,000,000 refugees have now been turned over to German and Austrian authorities as additional staggering burdens on their economies by IRO on July 1, 1950; and

Whereas both General Bradley and Mr. Paul Hoffman, together with Senator CONNALLY have now recognized the need to permit Western Germany not only to defend themselves but to make their maximum contribution to the strengthening of the North Atlantic Pact, and Ambassador Charles M. Spofford has been sent as special American Envoy by the American Government to implement such a policy; and

Whereas the State Department reveals that there is still a total of approximately 206 German industrial plants which have either been totally dismantled or which yet remain to be dismantled, all of which are to be shipped out of Western Germany as reparations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the United States Senate that a complete moratorium be declared on the further destruction, dismantling, or shipment of these plants out of Western Germany until a congressional committee of both Houses of Congress have ascertained whether it is possible—

First, for this remaining industrial plant equipment to be converted to meet the tremendous peacetime needs of western Germany such as housing, and so forth;

Second, whether a maximum contribution to the over-all European defense effort cannot better be obtained by empowering the Bonn Government, which on June 8, 1950, received authority from the Allied High Commission to negotiate and to conclude international treaties, to renegotiate its reparation settlements with recipient countries;

Third, whether an immediate lifting of the ban on steel production and the full utilization of the existing steel capacity under allied supervision and control would not facilitate a flow of steel both to the western European allies and to the United States which the anti-Soviet world now so desperately needs.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be passed over.

THE NEED OF A UNITED AMERICA—STATEMENT BY SENATOR GRAHAM

[Mr. HOEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement entitled "The Need of a United America," made by Senator GRAHAM, which appears in the Appendix.]

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

PROHIBITION OF TRANSPORTATION OF GAMBLING DEVICES IN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, it was my purpose today to call up the conference report on Senate bill 3357, the so-called slot machine conference report, but I am advised that the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] is out of the country and will not return for a few days. Inasmuch as he is extremely interested in this conference report, I shall not call it up until his return.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Colorado for that announcement, as I had been informed by the Senator from Nevada that he would like to be present when the subject comes up. Now that the statement has been made by the Senator from Colorado as a matter of record, I will say I deeply appreciate it.

CALL OF THE CALENDAR DISPENSED WITH

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business having been completed, the next business in order is the call of the calendar.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

AMENDMENT OF RAILWAY LABOR ACT

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, on the day the Senate adjourned, on the 23d of September, a motion was made to postpone consideration of Senate bill 3295 until November 27, which is today. As the Senate recalls, Senate bill 3295 is a bill to amend the Railway Labor Act and to authorize agreements providing for union membership and agreements for deductions from the wages of carriers' employees for certain purposes under certain conditions.

As I recall, the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] was debating the bill at the same time the Senate adjourned. The Senator from Alabama was at that time acting more or less on behalf of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] who was then campaigning, as I remember. I wonder whether the Senator from Utah who is now present, desires to press further consideration of the bill at this short session.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah wants the bill to remain the unfinished business. If it is desired to bring up other business at this time, however, I shall have no objection to having Senate bill 3295 temporarily laid aside so that other business, which the majority leader may desire brought before the Senate, can be considered.

Mr. LUCAS. In reply to the statement made by the Senator from Utah, I should like to say that in conference with the President of the United States this morning the President stated that he is very anxious that the Senate immediately consider House bill 331, an act to provide for the admission of Alaska into the Union. That is Calendar No. 1932. As we all know, the House of Representatives has passed favorably upon that bill. It has been pending upon the Senate calendar for some time.

Mr. President, I now move that the Senate temporarily lay aside Senate bill 3295 and proceed to the consideration of House bill 331.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senate is still in the morning hour, which lasts until 2 o'clock; and it will not be in order at this time to make that motion, because the bill does not come down automatically.

Mr. LUCAS. I thought the morning hour had been ended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business has been concluded, but the morning hour ends at 2 o'clock.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if there be no further morning business to be brought before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour be considered as having been concluded, so we can proceed to the consideration of the bill I have indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am not sure that I understand the parliamentary situation. Just what was the Senator from Illinois proposing?

Mr. LUCAS. I will say in reply to the Senator from Georgia that I thought the morning hour had been concluded, but the Vice President advises that only morning business has been concluded. I now renew my request that the morning hour be considered as having been concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to know what bill the Senator from Illinois proposed to take up.

Mr. LUCAS. I was proposing that Senate bill 3295 be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to consider H. R. 331, which is a bill to provide for the admission of Alaska into the Union. But I have withdrawn that unanimous-consent request in view of the fact that I had been mistaken in my impression that the morning hour had been concluded. Only morning business has been concluded. So when the morning hour is concluded I shall proceed to make the motion.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is a motion to lay aside a bill temporarily in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No, it is not in order. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is my impression, Mr. President. That is why I propounded my inquiry. If I correctly understood the distinguished majority leader, he moved temporarily to lay aside a bill. I did not think such a motion was in order under the rules of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not necessary to move to lay aside a bill which is the unfinished business. A motion to take up another bill, if adopted, displaces that bill automatically.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I correctly understood the parliamentary situation. The only thing I was trying to do was to protect the position of the Senator from Utah even though it was objectionable. If no one objected, the request could be granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois has asked unanimous consent that the morning hour be considered as having been concluded; as if the hour of 2 o'clock had arrived.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object; as I understand, the majority leader is asking unanimous consent that, in view of the fact that the morning business has been concluded, the morning hour now be considered as having been concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct. Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator if he proposes, if the unanimous consent be agreed to, to make the Alaska statehood bill the unfinished business today?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Georgia is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not know that there will be any objection to that course tomorrow, but I should like to consult a number of Senators who are interested in the matter. I hope the Senator will not press the unanimous-consent request at this time, but will make the motion tomorrow.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to state that this morning I consulted the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], who is the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, with respect to the handling of the statehood bills, and I agreed with him, and he agreed with me, that it would be preferable for all concerned not to take action upon either of these bills today, but if the statehood bill with respect to Alaska should be made the unfinished business, we would then agree not to take it up until tomorrow. As the Senator from Georgia has just stated, many Senators who are not present now are interested in the statehood measures. As a matter of fact, I think that Senators, both opposing and favoring these bills, are not prepared today to proceed with the debate. I think it would not be a proper method to proceed to debate the statehood bills today. So I should like to have it understood that if the request of the Senator from Illinois that the morning hour be terminated is granted and the Alaskan statehood bill is made the unfinished business, it shall then be my purpose to ask that the Senate go over until tomorrow before taking up either one of the statehood bills.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from Wyoming. The only thing I was trying to do was to get the bill before the Senate. If that can be done, and we then can agree to have the bill go over until tomorrow, as has heretofore been agreed upon by the majority and the minority ranking members of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, I shall have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois that the morning hour be regarded as having terminated?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, far be it from me to interfere with any plans on which the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Nebraska have agreed, but I doubt the advisability of making this bill the unfinished business today until more Senators are apprised of the fact that that course of action is to be followed. I shall not object to terminating the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour therefore will be regarded as having terminated.

The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, Senate bill 3295.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3295) to amend the Railway Labor Act and to authorize agreements providing for union membership and agreements for deductions from the wages of carriers' employees for certain purposes and under certain conditions.

STATEHOOD FOR ALASKA

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I now move to set aside Senate bill 3295 and proceed to the consideration of House bill 331.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, before that motion is agreed to, I think we should have a quorum present so all Senators may be advised as to the action proposed to be taken. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia withhold his suggestion temporarily?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia withhold his suggestion?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to set aside is not in order. The proper motion is to take up consideration of another bill.

Mr. WHERRY. If agreed, that automatically would set aside the pending business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the motion of the Senator from Illinois?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. RUSSELL. And if the motion prevails it would have the effect of sending the so-called railroad bill back to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill would go back to the calendar.

Mr. RUSSELL. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Connally	Frear

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is absent on official business as chairman of the Committee on Public Works.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, as a representative of the United States to the fifth session of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] are unavoidably detained because of adverse weather conditions.

Mr. WHERRY. I anounce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK], the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] are absent on official business of the Committee on Public Works.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is absent by leave of the Senate as a delegate of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] are unavoidably detained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, during the quorum call the motion I made a moment ago was discussed by various Members of the Senate who are vitally interested in this matter. It was agreed that I would enter the motion, but that we would take no action on it until tomorrow. I think that is satisfactory to everyone who is interested in this very important piece of proposed legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unless a recess, instead of an adjournment, is taken, the motion will die.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall try to have the Senate take a recess. I think that will be possible.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President——

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I think I should enlighten the Senate by informing it of the fact that the bill of which I am in charge is the unfinished business. I think I should at least make this statement before action is taken on the request of the majority leader.

The bill did receive some consideration before the adjournment was taken; and as the Senator from Illinois has already said, the bill was taken care of by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. In light of the President's message in regard to Alaska, I cannot object in any way to the motion the majority leader is going to make. I think the Senate should proceed with the Alaska statehood bill after receiving, and especially because of, the message the President of the United States has sent here.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the distinguished Senator from Utah.

I believe that I should state for the record that the measure just referred to by the able Senator from Utah has not passed the House of Representatives. I have been informed that the Rules Committee of the House failed to grant a rule prior to the date when Congress adjourned in September. I have serious doubt that such a bill can pass the House under the prevailing conditions.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to make a further inquiry. Of course the motion is debatable; but for the RECORD, so that all Members who have heard this colloquy will know what the situation is when the motion comes up later, if the Senate takes a recess now, without having further debate today on the motion, I think I should state that the motion is debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is debatable.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate at this time, I shall move that the Senate stand in recess.

THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION—REVIEWS OF BOOK BY MAX LOWENTHAL

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, there is a very brief statement, of about 5 minutes' duration, which I should like to make at this time, if the Senator from Illinois will yield to me for that purpose.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Iowa be permitted to speak for 5 minutes at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, in the Washington Post of November 26, 1950, there are published two reviews of a recent book entitled "The Federal Bureau of Investigation," by Max Lowenthal, New Deal mystery man of Washington.

The first review is by Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J. Reverend Walsh is known to the world as an opponent of communism and a devoted supporter of the American way of life. I ask unanimous consent that the review by him, as published in the Washington Post of November 26, be incorporated in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the review was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A LAWYER'S INDICTMENT IN MOOD OF PROSECUTOR

(By Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J.)

This thick volume—of which 90 pages are devoted to citation of sources and index—reviews the record of the FBI since it was first organized in 1908 by Attorney General Charles J. Bonaparte. Readers who take up Mr. Lowenthal's book, as the present reviewer did, in the pleasurable anticipation of perusing a balanced and objective historical study of the Federal Bureau of Investigation will be rudely disappointed. What the author has produced is a lawyer's indictment of the FBI in the style and mood of a prosecuting attorney.

Mr. Lowenthal specializes on those chapters of the Bureau's record which he describes as "little known, having been forgotten or sparingly publicized." Since he is drawing an indictment, not writing a biography, he selects his material with an eye to getting a conviction. He clearly conceives the FBI as a distinct menace to the security and liberties of the people of the United States. It will take some tall persuading to get such a verdict from the American people at the present, most dangerous crisis in our national existence.

Proceeding chronologically in his account, Mr. Lowenthal declares the bureau to have been an illegitimate child from the very moment of its conception; it was quietly brought into existence by Attorney General Bonaparte, without any approval of Congress, in 1908. This bar sinister, he argues, has characterized its growth and made it a progressively unwarranted and illegal interloper in the field of crime detection and crime prevention.

But before the reader meets the specific arguments in support of these allegations, he will notice a choice of words and phrases designed to slant the mind toward unfriendliness; thus the agents of the FBI are commonly called detectives, with considerable quotations from hostile witnesses who maintain that no detective can have high moral ideals, since he must always lead a life of deception. Increased responsibilities laid on the Bureau from time to time by Congress are described as greatly augmenting the business of the FBI. When the Bureau set itself to analyze communism in directives for its field agents, Mr. Lowenthal refers with sarcasm to the detective historians. By introducing comparisons between the FBI and the Czarist secret police of former times, the "hated black cabinet of St. Petersburg," he suggests guilt by analogy. Examples of such well-known propaganda techniques abound throughout the text.

In his citation of native-born Americans who had expressed opposition to FBI interference in matters of a political character, Mr. Lowenthal reproduces with approval the testimony of John Reed, an early enthusiast for freedom of speech in this country during World War I. But he omits entirely the relevant fact that John Reed's loyalty lay with Soviet Russia; he went to Moscow, espoused the cause of Lenin, and lies buried as a hero just outside the Kremlin wall. On a wintry afternoon in November 1922 the present reviewer wandered through the Red Square out of a curiosity to see the last resting place of that brilliant, but erratic Harvard graduate.

In working up to the main allegation of illegality in certain FBI activities, Mr. Lowenthal, at one point, devotes something like four pages to quotations from Mr. J. Edgar Hoover's analysis of communism as an international menace. These reports were compiled while Mr. Hoover was in a subordinate position in the Bureau, over 30 years ago. His analysis, and foresight, however, reveal how accurately he had penetrated even then to the tangled roots and hidden objectives of the Communist organization both in the United States and elsewhere. Communism, he knew, is like the mass of an iceberg: one-ninth above water, the rest out of sight.

Mr. Lowenthal's quotations are textually accurate; but the tone of his comment and the choice of words in weaving the excerpts together convey a subtle sense of ridicule and boredom similar to the sophisticated posing of the pseudo-liberals during the unlamented pink decade. Always he is the prosecuting attorney, now indignant and positive, now cajoling and insinuating.

He frequently beclouds the difference between unorthodox opinions and Communist advocacy of violence under pretense of free speech. But he is too late. Verdict has already been handed down—in Korea as well as by recent history in the captive lands behind the iron curtain and by the performances of Mr. Malik and Mr. Vishinsky in the United Nations.

What Mr. Hoover contended for in those early years has now become the law of the land. On May 8, 1950, the Supreme Court, in the case of American Communications Association versus Douds, upheld the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act in requiring an oath of nonmembership in the Communist Party from officers of a labor union as a prerequisite to profiting from the law. Mr. Justice Jackson delivered a notable opinion on the difference between the Communist Party and all other legitimate political groups in American history.

After analyzing the objectives of communism and the violent and undemocratic methods it adopts, the Justice declared that every member of the Communist Party is an agent to execute the Marxist program and hence to seize powers of Government in this country by force and violence; the entire conspiracy, he declared, is directed and controlled by a foreign government.

At certain stages in his long brief, Mr. Lowenthal steps on somewhat firmer ground than the unsubstantial foothold provided by dislike for Mr. Hoover, against whom he has worked up an elaborate personal vendetta. The claims of overzealousness in search and seizure during the Palmer raids and deportations of 1919–20, are resurrected. The legitimate complaints of some Senators and dissenting lawyers at that time are all compiled with a meticulousness and thoroughness not found in assembling the later record of constructive service and successful dealings with kidnaping, sabotage, and espionage. The shadows are deep black and the highlights always faint.

The precipitate actions charged as illegal procedure against some agents of the bureau in selected cases over the 42 years of its activities have always met the corrective influence of the courts, the Congress, and the press. Wire tapping at present is under public scrutiny and the Attorney General has made a ruling on the limited occasions when it may be employed.

One of the best contributions of the Greek philosophers was their ability to see life steadily and see it whole. Mr. Lowenthal's fears of an American Gestapo or an MVD in the United States are manufactured fears. The analogy of a police state, which he labors to picture, ignores the essential and permanent difference between police power in a controlled democracy and in an uncontrolled dictatorship. The very publication of Mr. Lowenthal's book at this time is a shining example of one important difference.

The FBI, moreover, must come, hat in hand, to plead yearly for its budget before a congressional committee. Special investigations are available when required. An alert and vociferous opposition party in the Congress will not let opportunity pass for embarrassing the incumbent administration, should authentic and substantive abuses be discovered in the Department of Justice. The Supreme Court has more than once reversed a policy or action of a President without the intimation being raised that the Presidency be abolished.

Mr. Hoover's immediate superiors have been Cabinet officers responsible to the Chief Executive as well as to the Congress. Not one of them, Republican or Democrat, has raised the pother of trivia assembled in this book. After every flurry and investigation, Congress consistently voted the necessary funds and refused to hamstring the Bureau.

Mr. Lowenthal is greatly alarmed over secret files. The danger of FBI records being diverted to unlawful use is no greater per se than that attending any accumulation of confidential reports in the State Department, in local police files, in hospitals, in the archives of the Armed Forces, in the records of practicing physicians and lawyers. The mounting expenses and budget of the FBI are cited as indication of empire building and growing extravagance. No comparable figures are produced to show the over-all increase in all Government departments in recent years, a trend so marked and comprehensive as to bring about the Hoover (Herbert) Commission on the Reorganization of the Federal Government. The recurrent drive to bring all employees of the FBI under civil service is renewed by Mr. Lowenthal despite the consistent refusal of the Congress to do so.

The Director of the Bureau, Mr. J. E. Hoover, is criticized for his speech-making and alleged publicity proclivities; but no mention is made of the frequent appearances of other high Government officials on lecture platforms, at political gatherings, at picnics, and on Nation-wide electioneering tours. Exception is taken to the practice of former FBI agents accepting lucrative positions in private industry. No mention is made of the scores of former Government officials and Senators who have opened offices in Washington for the practice of law or for other purposes in which their experience and special knowledge of government is of great benefit to their clients. Mr. Lowenthal himself, when recently questioned by the House Committee on Un-American Activities, was accompanied by a lawyer who had been a distinguished Member of the Senate.

The publications of the Bureau on crime prevention, juvenile delinquency, and similar community problems are denounced. But no mention is made of the tons of Government literature published and distributed by other agencies on such subjects as soil conservation, gardening, rotation of crops, fertilizers, pest control, peanut crops, and the ravages of termites.

The training programs of the Bureau, including both agent training and the police academy for officers of the various State, municipal, and county jurisdictions, are criticized either as inexpedient or an infringement of State jurisdiction. * * * In sober judgment this latter activity, now called the FBI National Academy, has been a highly laudable demonstration of the voluntary cooperation now existing between the Federal agency and the numerous State and local police units. The lack of such a unified front against criminality and the ready refuge thus afforded to criminals was one of the defects in crime enforcement cataloged by the President's Research Committee on Social Trends (1933).

High officials and men of lower rank from local police jurisdictions throughout the Nation have assembled regularly since 1935 in the halls of the FBI for advanced courses in professional police work. During the past 15 years 2,252 of them, including sheriffs and parole officers, came to Washington at their own expense, paid for their own board and lodging for 3 months, and returned to their respective communities fortified in morale and improved in technique. Among the trainees were representatives of Scotland Yard, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and other foreign governments, such as Egypt, China, and the Netherlands. The present reviewer has personally interviewed dozens upon dozens of these graduates of the FBI National Academy and found no evidence of the sinister doubts and suspicions apparently lurking in Mr. Lowenthal's mind.

It may be asked, Has this anthology of anti-Hooverisms no merit whatsoever? Its sole contribution would seem to consist in having swept up and put between book covers about all that has ever been said or imagined in defamation of the FBI. Consciously or unconsciously, Mr. Lowenthal has compiled a quick reference manual for all hostile elements, foreign and domestic, who seek ammunition for destroying confidence in one of our most trusted security agencies.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The second review is written by Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., who is listed as a former MacArthur staff officer, former Deputy Housing Administrator, and now a Washington lawyer.

The Post neglects to tell all the facts about Mr. Rauh, Jr., such as, for example, that he was chairman of the National Committee for Democratic Action, or that in February of 1950 he distributed to Members of Congress a speech in which he gave a distorted account of the work of the FBI.

One may well inquire whether the writing of Mr. Rauh is his own or whether it is from the pen of Lowenthal, Felix Frankfurter, or William W. Remington. Incidentally, Remington's perjury trial is scheduled to begin today.

The Post omits stating that Mr. Rauh is a former Frankfurter law clerk friend of the Hiss brothers, and at the present time the attorney for Remington, who stands accused of perjury in denying his Communist membership.

Mr. Rauh, Jr., is a friend of James L. Fly, of Americans for Democratic Action notoriety. As a matter of record, Mr. Rauh has been very articulate in his denunciation of the entire loyalty program and the efforts to rout Communists out of Government offices.

On February 17, 1942, there appeared in the newspaper PM a story by I. F. Stone, concerning lend-lease. This is the same Mr. Stone whom Cordell Hull publicly labeled a "liar." The story dealt with such phases of lend-lease as could only have been known to high lend-lease officials.

Mr. Rauh was at the time a top attorney in that agency. Shortly thereafter he quietly resigned. If, as some people believe, he "leaked" this story to the left-wing press, one can more readily understand Rauh's views on the loyalty program, on the work of the FBI, and on the book of Max Lowenthal's.

I cite these facts concerning Mr. Rauh's background merely for the information of my colleagues, so that they may evaluate the quarters from whence comes the inspiration for such an attack on the FBI as that made by Max Lowenthal.

For my personal belief, I have had the opportunity of close observation of the work of the FBI for a number of years. I know the Director and many of the top staff personnel of the Bureau. I have the greatest admiration and respect for the integrity of the Director, Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, and his staff personnel. He has operated the Federal Bureau of Investigation on the basis of service to the American people and the integrity of our American system. He has zealously and alertly investigated the activities of subversives and criminals who would undermine our national structure, and he has repeatedly warned the country about the dangers of indifference. He has been vigilant, and for this he is, of course, condemned repeatedly by the left wing reformers who would "make America over."

The American people have confidence in Mr. Hoover and in his administration of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Such biased attacks as those made by Mr. Lowenthal in his book should serve to sharpen the awareness of the public to the fact that there are elements in the United States who would rejoice greatly if through propaganda or otherwise the confidence in the great service rendered by the FBI could be shaken or destroyed.

Mr. Lowenthal can write any kind of book he wants to, I presume, but certainly his Objective Picture of the FBI appears to be not objective but an utterly biased piece of propaganda and I have no doubt it will be so received by the American people.

Mr. President, I should like to incorporate at this point in my remarks an article by Bert Andrews, which appeared in the New York Herald Tribune of November 22, 1950, under the headline "Book attacking record of FBI by Truman friend stirs dispute."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOOK ATTACKING RECORDS OF FBI BY TRUMAN FRIEND STIRS DISPUTE—MAX LOWENTHAL'S VOLUME IS EXPECTED TO RALLY J. EDGAR HOOVER'S FRIENDS IN CONGRESS

(By Bert Andrews)

WASHINGTON, November 21.—A book written by a close friend of President Truman—a book which many believe was done with the hope of destroying J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation—is having many effects that are just about opposite to those designed by the author, Max Lowenthal.

The situation as it shapes up today can be disclosed on the basis of considerable research, concrete and circumstantial evidence, the application of logic and the study of another volume by another friend of President Truman, who might well say by now:

"Protect me from book-writing friends."

The situation resulting from the publication of Mr. Lowenthal's The Federal Bureau of Investigation, by William Sloane Associates, is this:

1. Mr. Lowenthal's book comes as a last bit of evidence which justifies bringing into the open a matter that many observers in Washington have known about for a long time. This is that President Truman has little use for Mr. Hoover and probably would have had his Attorney General oust him long since if he wasn't fully aware that a majority of the Congress would rise up in wrathful protest.

2. The volume has brought Mr. Lowenthal under prompt counterattack from congressional friends of the FBI, and this, of course, hasn't displeased the FBI. The congressional friends have brought out that Mr. Lowenthal knew Alger Hiss, convicted of perjury on charges growing out of his relationship with Whittaker Chambers, one-time courier for the Russians. The congressional friends have brought out, too, that Mr. Lowenthal associated with Lee Pressman and a long list of others who either turned out to be Communists or denied it on the ground that an admission might incriminate them.

3. The Lowenthal onslaught on Mr. Hoover is bound to bring Mr. Hoover's friends on Capitol Hill to his defense when the "lame duck" session convenes on November 27 and when the Eighty-second Congress takes over on January 3 after the "lame ducks" limp out.

ON LOWENTHAL'S SIDE

On Mr. Lowenthal's side, there are these points:

1. The critics of the FBI are hailing it a masterful presentation of the views they have always held.

2. It will be widely read and, if read alone, might well convince a reader that the FBI was a Gestapo or was trying to be one.

3. One reason it will be widely read is that more free copies have been distributed in Washington than are usually sent out. Three copies were sent to the Washington Bureau of the New York Herald Tribune, for example, where usually publishers send only one. President Truman and his aides in the White House may—and probably will—deny that he has any intention of chopping the Hoover head off. (And nothing in this article, incidentally, is meant to suggest that the President has read or approves of the Lowenthal book.)

DANIELS BOOK CITED

However, the research supplies such point-by-point logic as the following—and supporting quotations will follow:

A. There has been talk for years that President Truman's dislike for Mr. Hoover dates back to the time the FBI took part in the investigation that led to the downfall of the late Thomas J. Pendergast, the President's original political sponsor.

B. There has been talk also that the dislike has increased over the years.

C. Jonathan Daniels, former White House adviser, in The Man of Independence emphasized that President Truman and Mr. Lowenthal have long been friends.

D. Mr. Daniels gave reporters the impression that President Truman had read his book in manuscript and approved of all of it.

E. This would mean that President Truman approved of the passages extolling Mr. Lowenthal and telling of their friendship.

F. Mr. Lowenthal in his book has a couple of examples of what seem to be inside dope on President Truman's feeling toward Mr. Hoover, as, for example, his statement that the President twice rejected suggestions—once in 1950 and once some years earlier—that Mr. Hoover be made the over-all head of a superintelligence agency including the FBI and the Central Intelligence Agency.

1949 PRESS CONFERENCE

G. At one press conference in June 1949, President Truman was asked if Mr. Hoover had his confidence. He replied that Mr. Hoover had done a good job. A reporter said: "You said last week that all these investigations just amounted to a lot of headline hunting. Does that include Hoover?" The President told the reporter he could assay that situation as well as the President could. He was asked if he conferred with Mr. Hoover from time to time. He replied that Mr. Hoover makes reports to him from time to time and that he conferred with him through the Attorney General.

H. Nevertheless it is known that the President hasn't called Mr. Hoover in in a long time for a conference. This is in decided contrast to the actions of his predecessor, the late Franklin D. Roosevelt, who consulted frequently with Mr. Hoover.

So, it seems:

That President Truman doesn't like Mr. Hoover and would like to see him out.

That Mr. Lowenthal certainly doesn't like Mr. Hoover and would like ditto.

The circumstantial evidence in Daniel's book telling how Mr. Hoover arrived in Kansas City on April 4, 1939, how Mr. Pendergast was indicted on April 7 on insurance fraud charges, and how President Truman reacted with the words:

"Pendergast has been my friend when I needed it. I am not one to desert a ship when it starts to go down."

There is another passage—showing what a good hater President Truman can be—which observes that President Truman refused to reappoint the district attorney, Maurice Milligan, after he became President in 1945.

But the most interesting passages, in the light of the Lowenthal book, are the Daniel's discussions of the Truman-Lowenthal friendship.

Some of them follow:

Page 284 tells how "a self-effacing but ubiquitous man named Max Lowenthal" worked in 1936 for a Senate subcommittee investigating railroad finances and how Senator Truman became chairman of the subcommittee just as hearings about the Missouri Pacific came up.

Mr. Daniels writes:

"Max Lowenthal and other members of the staff of the subcommittee were a little disturbed about this unexpected coincidence of a Missouri railroad and a Missouri Senator. They pointed to Truman that some of the things which would come out in the investigation might embarrass him at home.

"'No', Truman told them. He would not be embarrassed.

"'Then,' said Lowenthal, 'some of the lawyers told Truman that some of the exhibits were pretty hot stuff and it would be possible to just put them into the record without bringing them out in the hearing.

"'No,' Truman told them. 'Treat this just as you would any other hearing.'

"The messages and telephone calls, telegrams, and letters began pouring in from Missouri asking him, first: to stop the hearings on the Missouri Pacific and, second: to go easy on it.

"LIKE ANY OTHER HEARING

"'Treat this like any other hearing,' Truman told them again. Lowenthal, who had had the image of the Pendergast office boy in his mind when Truman had assumed the chairmanship, was impressed. He began to watch this Senator from Missouri. Unnoticed then, his methods in investigation were the same which made his Truman committee later so effective in the war effort. He combined the politician's ease with the public servant's determination.

"'There were not half a dozen Senators then who would have withstood the pressure he took,' Lowenthal said.

"Casually one day, but with the secret feeling of a man offering a well-earned accolade, Lowenthal suggested to Truman that he would like to take him to see his friend Justice Louis D. Brandeis. Brandeis was over 80 then and had become, with Oliver Wendell Holmes, one of the two great judges of the American liberal tradition. Brandeis' California Street apartment had become a Washington institution when Lowenthal invited Truman to go with him there. Truman regarded him very seriously.

"'I'm not used to meeting people like that,' he said.

"It was true. Most of his growth and studying had been free from great intellectual companionship, as his voracious reading as a small-town boy had been largely self-directed.

"After his first meeting with Brandeis, he went often to California Street, almost every other week, to the open houses which the justice held for his selected friends."

FRIENDSHIP CONTINUES

The Truman-Lowenthal friendship continued over the years.

Mr. Daniels writes of 1944:

"His new stature as chairman of the Truman committee suggested him to some as a solution to them. His friend Lowenthal had been one of those strongly urging him to run for the Vice Presidency. And on one of the last Sundays before the convention in Chicago he called Truman's secretary, Bill Boyle, about it.

"Lowenthal went up to the Senate Office Building to see Truman. They talked in the Sunday quietness of that huge building.

"Truman said he had talked it over with the Mrs. and had decided not to be a candidate. Also, he had a daughter and the White House was no place for children.

"That statement suggests that there was a time before the convention when Truman was thinking and thinking hard about the nomination. The statement Lowenthal remembers about the child and the White House emphasizes the current political calculation that the Democratic Vice Presidential nominee that year would probably become President of the United States.

"'He drove me home,' Lowenthal said. 'We stopped at his apartment on Irving Street to get his bags, then he dropped me at my house in Chevy Chase.'

"Somewhere along the way Truman told Lowenthal that he was too poor to think about running. And he used an earthy American expression about the lack of both a pot and a window. Lowenthal was still arguing, reluctant to agree, when he got out of the car at his own house."

The Daniels' description of the Truman-Lowenthal friendship is cited at length because of a passage in Mr. Lowenthal's book, in which he says President Truman twice rejected the suggestions that Mr. Hoover be made the top, over-all head of espionage and counterespionage.

This was not general knowledge at the times Mr. Lowenthal lists.

This reporter has learned that the suggestions came from the Military Establishment and that President Truman would have none of them. Mr. Lowenthal, after noting that Congress voted Mr. Hoover a salary raise and praised him, goes on to say:

"There are some indications, however, that the views * * * are not universally held by Americans interested in effective counterespionage. President Truman, when he set up, the CIA (Central Intelligence Agency) as a new espionage and counter-espionage organization, disregarded suggestions that Mr. Hoover himself should become the head of any such superintelligence organization. In 1950, when the President made a new appointment to the post, he again disregarded the suggestions that Mr. Hoover be promoted to that position. Indeed, when the President created the CIA he went further and withdrew from the FBI authority it had possessed for 7 years in counterespionage work throughout Central and South America."

LAW-ENFORCEMENT REPORT

Mr. Lowenthal makes much of the fact that a Senate committee of which Mr. Truman was a member issued a report on law enforcement which while specifically stating that its charges were directed against the FBI, acknowledged that it was aimed at that police unit.

Mr. Lowenthal a number of times uses quotes of President Truman to criticize quotes of Mr. Hoover, as for example:

"In May 1950, Mr. Hoover described the Communists as the most dangerous and one of the most powerful forces in the United States.

"But some informed authorities believe otherwise today, as in the past. In 1950, President Truman gave his opinion, 'we know that the greatest threat to us does not come from the Communists in this country. Communism has little appeal for people who are healthy, well-educated, prosperous, and free. The fact of the matter is—because of the measures we are taking—the internal security of the United States is not seriously threatened by the Communists in this country.'"

To sum up the Lowenthal-FBI feud:

Mr. Lowenthal has started quite a free-for-all.

The FBI, while officially making no comment, is fighting back through its friends on Capitol Hill. One example of this came when Congressmen circulated a House Committee on Un-American Activities report of testimony taken from Mr. Lowenthal on September 15. The committee showed much interest in Mr. Lowenthal's associations with many men who have been labeled as Communists or fellow travelers by witnesses before the committee.

LOWENTHAL TESTIMONY

Mr. Lowenthal showed much interest in pointing out that he had done extensive work for the Government and in stating:

"In the course of 38 years I have met tens of thousands of people, and worked with them, too. I have dealt with many organizations. I think if you take it in proportion to the sum total of what I have been engaged in, all these questions, even if the answer was 'yes,' to them, wouldn't amount to a hill of beans in proportion."

One Washington opinion of the Lowenthal book was voiced by Rex Collier, in the Evening Star. It noted that the publisher, William Sloane Associates, Inc., of New York, said the book with its "unbiased and profoundly conservative approach" would lead "to some startling conclusions." Mr. Collier said: "One conclusion of this reviewer is that this is the most nonobjective objector book on the FBI ever published."

John Keats, in the Washington Daily News, noted that no one can ever do an inside job on the workings of the FBI, because the FBI won't yield the necessary information.

Mr. Keats added:

"No evil can come from the public's critical examination of the country's Federal police, if it is done thoughtfully and objectively. This book starts the discussion. This country has been singularly free from activities of secret police. The time is probably now to find out whether it needs more or less of this commodity, and how to check its activities in terms of our budget as well as our political philosophy."

All in all, it's quite a "rhubarb."

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I should also like to incorporate as a part of my remarks at this point an editorial entitled "Smearing the FBI," from the New York Herald Tribune of November 23, 1950.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SMEARING THE FBI

Had the FBI been made the victim of an ordinary smear artist the results would have been deplorable enough. The attack made by Max Lowenthal in his newly published book (The Federal Bureau of Investigation) is, however—by reason of its method and circumstances—particularly obnoxious. This lengthy volume, with its outward pretense to authoritativeness and objectivity, could easily be mistaken for a factual guide to the course of the FBI during its 42 years of existence. It is only when the text has been examined that the author's manner and aims become clear. Mr. Lowenthal has strung together an exhausting series of quotations from public records, inconclusive, tendentious and frequently out of context, designed to have the cumulative result of implying that the FBI has been ineffectual, prejudiced, concerned chiefly with notoriety for itself, and careless of the civil liberties of the citizens. The book's publication occurs at a time when the FBI's activities against Communist infiltration require—as indeed they merit—an unhesitating public confidence; and the whole venture is made the more disturbing by suggestions of White House encouragement.

What is the truth? The FBI under J. Edgar Hoover has been a vigilant and highly effective agency in the fields of crime over which it has jurisdiction. In the more pervasive and general assignment which the Communist conspiracy cast upon it, the FBI has been as alert as it has been fruitful in results. Throughout there has been a sharp awareness on the part of the Director of the need for a Federal policing agency to work within the rigid lines laid down by the Constitution, and within the frame of values of a free, liberty-loving people. The American Civil Liberties Union last summer wrote to Mr. Hoover, congratulating him on the fine balance he had maintained in dealing with the serious and intricate problem of national security in relation to civil liberties. This judgment finds no place in the pages of Mr. Lowenthal's book, but it is one that will be echoed by every impartial observer who has watched national police agencies in other countries ride roughshod over individual rights.

Americans have every reason to be proud of the FBI and thankful for the record of the man who for more than 25 years has shaped and directed its activities. It would be nothing less than a calamity if, at this crucial moment in the Nation's life, the insinuations and distortions of the Lowenthal book were to undermine Mr. Hoover's position or to cast doubt upon his work.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I should like also to incorporate at this point in my remarks an editorial entitled, "Harry Gunning for Hoover?", from the New York Daily News of Monday, November 27, 1950.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HARRY GUNNING FOR HOOVER?

J. Edgar Hoover, we mean, Chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation; and the Harry mentioned above is Harry S. Truman.

Widespread curiosity as to whether Harry is after Mr. Hoover's official hide has been inspired by the recent publication of a book which savagely and, we think, unfairly attacks Hoover and the FBI.

Author: Max Lowenthal, lawyer, long-time pal of Reds and fellow travelers, persistent smearer of the FBI, and close friend of Mr. Truman.

Title of the book: The Federal Bureau of Investigation, William Sloane Associates, New York, 1950; 559 pages, $4.50.

As is well known, Mr. Truman seldom has been more than formally polite to J. Edgar Hoover. It is widely believed that the President would like to get Hoover fired off the FBI if he could.

In his book, Mr. Lowenthal has collected just about every unfavorable criticism ever made of the FBI and Mr. Hoover. Some of our own editorials, for example, are quoted from, pieces we printed about 10 years ago, when we felt that Mr. Hoover was being far too zealous in trying to enforce the largely unenforceable Mann Act.

We still think that criticism was justified. But the short-lived Mann Act hullabaloo was virtually the only Hoover performance we ever took exception to. We believe the FBI's anti-Communist, antispy, and antisabotage services to this country have been and are invaluable.

To hear Lowenthal tell it, the FBI is a bungling, antidemocratic secret-police organization using methods resembling those of Stalin's MVD and the late Hitler's Gestapo, and a serious threat to civil liberties.

Hoover himself is portrayed as a cross between A. Mitchell Palmer (hysterical Attorney General in Woodrow Wilson's time) and the late Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, Hitler's propagandist-in-chief. He gets no credit for keeping effective tabs on the Communist traitors, for helping importantly toward conviction of the 11 top United States Reds on conspiracy charges, or for safeguarding American institutions and customs in numerous other ways.

If President Truman didn't give his friend Lowenthal's smear volume a friendly nod, as is being widely surmised, why not just repudiate the book publicly as an unjustified attack on a top-value American?

If Harry actually is gunning for Hoover, he will have Congress to reckon with. In that body, any serious Truman attempt to get Hoover seems 98 percent likely to draw a rebuff which will leave Harry wondering for days afterward what hit him.

In case you're curious about the kind of people Hoover is up against in his FBI contests with United States Reds, we recommend another recently issued book, The Front Is Everywhere, by Lt. Col. William R. Kintner, University of Oklahoma Press, Norman, Okla.; 274 pages, 9 illustrations, $3.75.

Colonel Kintner discusses the communism versus freedom front all over the world outside the iron curtain, with particular reference to the United States.

The world-wide Communist Party, he finds after exhaustive study of its set-up and its official literature, is not a political party like the Democrats or Republicans, but an army. It is organized on military lines like any other army. Its membership is highly disciplined, fanatically loyal to the Moscow high command, and prepared to jump into battle for the overthrow of existing governments wherever and whenever the opportune moment arrives.

COMMUNIST PARTY IS REALLY AN ARMY

It's a mistake, says Kintner, to try to treat these people as if they were members of just another political party. The way to deal with them, he insists, is to handle them as traitors—persons sworn and determined to topple our social system and bring in Stalinism in an unconstitutional way.

This is the kind of thing J. Edgar Hoover and the FBI have been fighting for years, and are still fighting. They have to fit their methods to the enemy's tactics and strategy, or they can't hope to win.

Because they have been and are so successful, they are at the top of the United States Communists and fellow travelers' hate list, and are libeled, smeared, and vilified in every way these traitors' brilliant imaginations can invent.

It will be interesting to watch how big a play Lowenthal's attack on the FBI gets in various broad-minded newspaper and magazine book review columns, and how little a play, if any, is given Colonel Kintner's cold-turkey diagram of the underground Red army as now organized in this and all other non-Stalinist countries.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, as I close my remarks, I should like to refer to a speech regarding Mr. Lowenthal, entitled "A Man of Mystery," made in the House of Representatives on Friday, September 1, 1950, by Representative DONDERO. I shall not ask to have it incorporated at this point in my remarks, because it is already in the RECORD, at page 14150.

I thank the Senator from Illinois for his courtesy.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution 287, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who art far beyond the wisdom and the best reasoning of our finite minds, we rejoice that Thou art always within reach of sincere and simple faith and ready to reveal Thy will unto the humble spirit and contrite heart.

We thank Thee for this new day with its many opportunities for noble and courageous service and further effort in the building of a better world. May our faith never be eclipsed by doubt or fear and may we never grow weary in well-doing.

Grant that in all the emergencies and crises of our national life we may rely upon Thy divine providence. May the sense of Thy presence be as clear in politics and statecraft as in religion and may it motivate all our thoughts and actions.

We pray that our President, our Speaker, our chosen Representatives, our statesmen, our soldiers and all the citizens of our Republic may feel the compelling constraints of establishing the kingdom of peace and righteousness upon the earth. In their plans and labors, their struggles and sacrifices, may they be sustained by a radiant vision of its ultimate triumph.

Hear us in the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

DISAPPROVAL OF BILLS AFTER ADJOURNMENT

The message further informed the House that on the following dates the President had withheld his approval of the bills of the House of the following titles:

DR. JACOB ORNSTEIN

I am withholding approval of H. R. 1799, a bill for the relief of Dr. Jacob Ornstein.

This bill would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $1,858 to Dr. Jacob Ornstein, of Waldorf College, Forest City, Iowa, for the purchase of an automobile equipped with such special attachments and devices as may be necessary to enable Dr. Ornstein to operate such automobile by hand.

The records of the Bureau of Employees' Compensation of the Department of Labor show that Dr. Ornstein was employed by the Office of Strategic Services in September 1942, in a civilian capacity as a linguist; that on May 30, 1945, while assigned to duty in Italy, he contracted poliomyelitis in the performance of his duties; and that he was a patient at the Elizabeth Kenny Institute at Minneapolis, Minn., from August 2, 1945, to September 5, 1947.

The latest medical report on file in the Bureau of Employees' Compensation indicates that both of Dr. Ornstein's lower limbs are paralyzed. The Bureau of Employees' Compensation has, up to the present time, expended $4,088.06 for medical, hospital, and appliance expenses as a result of Dr. Ornstein's illness, and he is presently receiving under the authority of the Federal Employees' Compensation Act, as amended, compensation and other benefits for this disability in an amount totaling $332.84 a month. In addition, he is regularly employed in the teaching profession.

In enacting this legislation, the Congress apparently has wished to recognize the contribution of Dr. Ornstein to his country as being equivalent to that of members of the Armed Forces. In effect, this measure would extend, although on a somewhat more liberal basis, a benefit now available to veterans of World War II who are entitled to compensation for the loss or loss of use of one or both legs. Under the veterans' laws such persons are entitled to a one-time gift of a specially equipped automobile, the cost of which is not to exceed $1,600. While I have no fault to find with the concept of recognizing civilian service to one's country in time of war, particularly in the battle zone, as being equivalent to service in the Armed Forces, a distinction between the two kinds of service has been established and maintained over a great many years. I believe the distinction must continue to be maintained.

Without prejudice to the valuable services rendered by Dr. Ornstein and others who served their country as civilians during the past war, I do not feel that we can relax the well-established principle that special benefits for military service accrue only to veterans of the Armed Forces. Such benefits are by their nature designed to compensate this class of personnel for the hardship or liability to hardship to which they were exposed because of military duty, and to care for individuals or their dependents in accordance with need occasioned thereby.

With regard to the general legislation authorizing the provision of special automobiles to certain veterans, I have already indicated my opposition to any extension in scope of this law by withholding my approval of S. 2115, Eighty-first Congress, which would have made all veterans who have lost the use of one or both hands or feet or suffered impairment of vision to a prescribed degree eligible for such benefits. To approve H. R. 1799, particularly in view of the higher ceiling on the purchase price of automobiles provided therein, would certainly encourage enactment of legislation extending the scope of the existing law and raising the purchase price to an amount equal to that stipulated in H. R. 1799.

While it is to be regretted that Dr. Ornstein has been permanently disabled in line of duty, I believe that for the Federal Government to grant him an additional award of $1,858 to purchase a specially equipped automobile would discriminate against other Federal civilian employees who may have suffered similar or greater disabilities and whose plights are as deserving as that of Dr. Ornstein.

For these reasons, I feel that I cannot approve this measure.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 28, 1950.

WYOMING NATIONAL BANK

I have withheld my approval from the enrolled bill (H. R. 3012) for the relief of the Wyoming National Bank of Wilkes-Barre.

This bill would direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the claimant $46,841.16 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for costs incurred and losses sustained under three contracts originally entered into by the Signal Corps of the War Department and Preston C. Sherman, doing business under the firm name of Sherman Associates, and ultimately completed by the bank.

The direct involvement of the claimant bank in the foregoing transactions occurred after the filing of an involuntary petition in bankruptcy against Sherman Associates. The bank had theretofore advanced Sherman Associates funds with which to perform the contracts and approximately 50 percent of the work had been completed at the time bankruptcy ensued. According to the testimony of the bank's counsel, given before a congressional committee, the bank was then faced with a dilemma which was expressed in the following terms to a Signal Corps representative:

> We have already quite a lot of money put into this, and we do not know whether we should stop now and take any loss we might have to take on it or whether we should go further and advance more money.

It is alleged that the contracting officer thereupon gave the bank assurances that if the work was completed the bank need "not worry about the payment for it; that we—the Signal Corps—will find some way to do that." I am in receipt of a report from the Department of the Army that the contracting officer, who was not called as a witness before the congressional committee, categorically denied making any agreement directly or indirectly to reimburse the bank in any amounts other than those which would become due under the original Sherman Bros. fixed-price contracts as the work thereunder progressed and was completed.

Certain it is that the written supplementary agreement under which the bank undertook to complete the contracts contained no provision indicating the existence of any other understanding. Thereunder the bank, in the terms of the supplementary agreement, agreed through its agent "to assume and hereby assumes all of the duties, liabilities, and obligations of the transferor—the trustee in bankruptcy." The obligations of the United States were expressed in article IV of the supplemental agreement, reading:

> Article IV. The Government agrees to recognize the transferee as the successor in interest in and under said contracts and, as the contractor thereunder, entitled to such payments as may be due or become due thereunder.

As before stated, the contracts originally entered into by Sherman Associates, and assumed by the bank under the provisions of the supplemental agreement above quoted, were fixed-price contracts and contained no guaranty of reimbursement for possible losses incurred thereunder. The written supplemental agreement entered into by the bank was therefore on its face contrary to what the bank now says was intended, despite the fact that the bank was represented by able counsel in negotiating that agreement. Moreover, as before pointed out, the contracting officer has stated that the supplemental agreement fully expressed the intent of the parties and that no other underlying agreement in variance therewith existed.

The full contract price for each of the three contracts involved has been paid by the United States. The matter was presented before the Board of Contract Appeals, which held that no further relief could be afforded the bank. An appeal was thereupon taken to the Court of Claims. In this connection it is to be noted that the congressional committee was erroneously advised that the Court of Claims dismissed this appeal on grounds similar to that which had caused its dismissal by the Board of Contract Appeals. In point of fact the records of the Court of Claims show that the appeal to that court was dismissed for failure of the plaintiff to prosecute it.

In the light of all the foregoing facts I find it at least difficult to give credence to the allegation that there existed an oral agreement, contrary to the written understanding of the parties, that the bank was to be allowed full recoupment of any losses suffered in this transaction. My difficulties with this bill, however, do not end there. Apart from any issue as to the authority of the Signal Corps' contracting officer so to bind the United States, if indeed he purported to do so, it is to be observed that it is impossible to determine to what extent Sherman Associates was indebted to the bank at the time of the filing of the bankruptcy petition. The record made before the Board of Contract Appeals seems to indicate that the bulk of the bank's losses was suffered on account of loans already made to Sherman Associates before bankruptcy ensued. This bill apparently would reimburse the bank for all losses suffered in the entire course of its transactions in connection with these contracts, and it therefore appears probable that the bank is to receive payment for substantial losses incurred prior to the time any conferences were held between the bank and personnel of the Signal Corps. These losses could not therefore have been suffered by reason of any alleged representations on the part of such Government personnel.

I am not persuaded that this claimant is either legally or equitably entitled to the relief proposed by H. R. 3012, and I am accordingly unable to give my approval to this bill.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

MERCHANT SHIP SALES ACT OF 1946

I have withheld my approval from H. R. 3419, to amend the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946.

This bill provides that in certain cases the cost basis of a war-built vessel purchased prior to the enactment of the Merchant Ship Sales Act shall be the undepreciated original purchase price reduced by the net amount of the adjustment provided in section 9 (b) of the act.

The purpose of the Merchant Ship Sales Act was to establish a uniform pricing policy for the sale of Government vessels. The prices computed by the formula provided in the act are considerably below the actual construction cost of the vessels and also below the prices of identical vessels sold prior to the date of enactment.

In order to accord prior purchasers a parity of treatment with those buying vessels subsequent to passage of the act, section 9 (b) prescribes certain procedures by which a prior purchaser voluntarily may obtain adjustments in his original price. The buyer is treated as if he purchased his vessels at the date of enactment of the Merchant Ship Sales Act, and certain previous negotiations between the buyer and the Government are taken into account in determining the net adjustment downward. Thus, among other items, the buyer is required to credit to the Government the amount of charter-hire paid by it to him for the use of his vessel during this period. The Government, in turn, credits the buyer with the taxes paid on this charter-hire and with interest on certain amounts of his investment in the vessel. The net effect of these adjustments has usually been in favor of the Government so that the adjusted obligation of the prior purchaser has been somewhere between the price which he originally paid for the vessel and the statutory sales price.

The enactment of this bill arises primarily from the fact that the Treasury Department has ruled that for tax purposes the cost basis of a prior purchased vessel is the statutory sales price. In so ruling, the Treasury Department has held that the adjustments which raised the purchaser's obligation above the statutory sales price are in the nature of bookkeeping corrections, designed to cancel out completely the financial transactions between the Government and the shipowners who bought war-built vessels prior to the passage of the Merchant Ship Sales Act. These shipowners, on the other hand, contend that the section 9 (b) language is not intended to undo the previous operations and that it merely prescribes a formula for arriving at a price which should reflect the net cost for tax purposes as well as for other purposes. On the basis of this interpretation, the shipowners argue that they ultimately will be required to pay the Government an amount greater than the statutory sales price and that consequently the cost basis of the vessels, upon which depreciation allowances are claimed, should include this additional amount.

The fundamental question presented by this bill is which of the two interpretations of the section 9 (b) provisions results in the more equitable treatment to all parties concerned. This measure would resolve the issue in favor of the shipowners' contention.

It is my belief, however, that, as a matter of principle and if no adjustment contracts had already been executed, interpretation of section 9 (b) to require an undoing of all transactions prior to the enactment of the Merchant Ship Sales Act would afford more equitable treatment to both prior and subsequent purchasers and to the Government. Only this interpretation can negate the benefit to prior purchasers of profits on charter-hire rates which were based upon a valuation of the vessels considerably in excess of the statutory sales price set in 1946. Furthermore, other provisions of the Merchant Ship Sales Act already provide that for certain purposes the cost basis of the vessels owned by prior purchasers shall be the statutory sales price. The consistent pattern of treatment provided in the act would be destroyed by granting in this one subsection the concession on cost basis entailed in this measure. Finally, the benefits accruing to prior purchasers, if they are allowed to capitalize these amounts above the statutory sales price, would afford them the special operating advantages which arise from the higher depreciation allowances possible under this measure.

I am concerned, however, lest some shipowners who have already accepted price adjustments did so on the assumption that the cost basis of their vessels for tax purposes would be the original price reduced by the net amount of the adjustments under section 9 (b), operating only as a pricing formula. I am advised that, as a consequence, these owners may not be able to choose the course of action which would prove the more beneficial to them taxwise, an election which will still be available to purchasers who have filed for price adjustments but have not yet accepted them. I believe, therefore, that the owners who have taken the adjustments and now find that their contracts are disadvantageous should request the Secretary of Commerce to examine the possibility of relieving them from these commitments. If it is determined that no authority exists to take such action, I believe the Congress should be requested to enact legislation which would permit these owners to be released from price-adjustment commitments already made.

UNITED TRANSFORMER CO.

I am withholding my approval from H. R. 6489, an act "for the relief of the United Transformer Co. (formerly United Transformer Corp.)."

This act would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the United Transformer Co. of New York, N. Y., the sum of $54,458 in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for compensation for war materials shipped to Horni Signal Manufacturing Co., of New York, N. Y.

In 1943 and 1944, the United Transformer Co., as subcontractor, supplied to Horni Signal Manufacturing Co., as prime contractor, transformers which were incorporated in mine detectors manufactured by the contractor under prime contracts with the Army Signal Corps. The sealing compound used in a total of 18,650 transformers valued at $2.92 each proved to be defective. The defective transformers were returned by the Army to the contractor and were replaced. The new transformers were supplied to the contractor by the subcontractor.

The Government thereafter paid $67,727.17 to the contractor in full satisfaction for the cost of the replaced transformers and the labor involved. Of this sum, the subcontractor was entitled to be paid $54,458 for the new transformers supplied by it to the contractor, but the latter failed to make this payment.

The present claim is predicated upon the contentions that, at the request of the Army Signal Corps, the subcontractor shipped the transformers to the contractor on an open account basis; that the Army Signal Corps refused to enter into direct negotiation with the subcontractor to settle its claim of $54,458 on account of the replacement of the defective transformers; and that the subcontractor was instructed by the Army Signal Corps to process its claim through the prime contractor.

It has been settled in a proceeding brought by the subcontractor before the Appeal Board of the Office of Contract Settlement that the Army's request that the subcontractor deal with the contractor on an open account basis did not apply to the transaction involving the replacement of the defective transformers already mentioned. Furthermore, the Army was within its rights in dealing with the prime contractor rather than with the subcontractor in the settlement of the claim which arose by reason of the replacement of the defective transformers. The Government had no alternative but to deal with its prime contractor; in so doing the prime contractor was not made the Government's agent with respect to dealings between the contractor and the subcontractor. Payment for the replaced transformers having already been properly made to the contractor, it is clear that there is no liability on the part of the Government for any further payment to the subcontractor.

Audits of the records of the subcontractor made in connection with renegotiation of its war business indicate that it earned substantial profits on all of that business, even after deducting the amounts which were uncollected from the contractor. For the 15-month period ending February 28, 1945, in which the transaction here involved took place, its records show that the subcontractor earned a net over-all profit of $773,695 on renegotiable war business.

Furthermore, as I have pointed out to the Congress in my veto message of June 30, 1950, on H. R. 3436, and in my veto message of August 21, 1950, on S. 3906, I am opposed to the enactment into law of any legislation whereby the Government would be construed as insuring contractors supplying goods and services to the Government in wartime against net losses which they might incur. This bill would, as to this one concern, adopt such a form of insurance, and would in fact go one step farther, in that it would reimburse a concern for a loss incurred on a single contract although its total wartime business had been extremely profitable. I adhere to the views I have previously expressed on this subject, and feel that the present bill is clearly in contradiction of them.

So far as the equities of the situation are concerned, it appears that the United Transformer Co. extended certain credit to a prime contractor and has not been paid. The Government, on the other hand, has paid the prime contractor, and there is no good reason why it should pay twice for the same services. Also, the Government lost substantially more as a result of the Horni Signal Manufacturing Co.'s bankruptcy than did the United Transformer Co., recovering only about $300,000 on a claim which it filed in the bankruptcy proceedings for approximately $2,000,000. Under such circumstances, equity would seem to dictate that the losses of the parties should be left as they are.

Similarly, the United Transformer Co. has taken credit for this loss both for income tax purposes and as a credit in the renegotiation of its wartime profits. It is highly unlikely that the renegotiation proceedings, at least, could be reopened at this time, so that the result of this payment would be to credit the United Transformer Co. with additional income attributable to its wartime business, in addition to the amounts left it after renegotiation, which represented a slightly higher precentage of its gross income than the average for its industry.

Since there is neither a legal nor an equitable basis for relief of the type provided by this bill, and since it represents a form of insurance against wartime losses to which I am opposed, I am constrained to withhold my approval from H. R. 6489.

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF SEDGWICK COUNTY, KANS.

I am withholding approval of H. R. 7854 "to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon a certain claim of the Board of County Commissioners of Sedgwick County, Kans."

The bill confers jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Board of County Commissioners of Sedgwick County, Kans., against the Government of the United States on account of delinquent real-estate taxes for the tax years 1944, 1945, 1946, and 1947 (together with penalties, interest, and charges) assessed and levied against three tracts of land in Sedgwick County, constituting the aircraft factory and grounds owned in such years by the Defense Plant Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and which were leased to the Boeing Airplane Co., and transferred on or about February 25, 1948, to the United States. The measure also provides that the court shall determine the amount of taxes, penalties, interest, and charges, and render judgment in favor of the board of county commissioners against the United States for the amount of any of such items which the court may find and adjudge to have been lawfully assessed against the real estate and remaining due and unpaid.

The record shows that title to certain lands and buildings in Sedgwick County, Kans., was vested during those years in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Corporation leased these lands to the Boeing Airplane Co. for the manufacture of aircraft under the contract with the Air Force. Under the provisions of the lease agreement, Boeing was responsible for any taxes validly assessed and the United States was in turn required to reimburse Boeing under a cost-plus-fixed-fee contract. The county taxing authorities levied taxes upon the real estate in question for each of the years 1944, 1945, 1946, and 1947, which taxes have not been paid. On February 25, 1948, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation conveyed the property to the United States. Thereafter, the county commissioners instituted an action in the district court of Sedgwick County to foreclose a lien for taxes on the property. The action was dismissed by the court on the ground that it was a suit against the United States and the United States had not consented to be sued.

I find objectionable those provision in the bill which authorize the court to render judgment in favor of the county and against the United States for the amount of any penalties, interest, and charges, in connection with the taxes levied by the board of county commissioners. To impose a liability upon the Federal Government for such penalties, interest, and charges is inconsistent with the sound and long-established doctrines that claims against the United States do not bear interest and that the Federal Government is not liable for penalties. The enactment of legislation in derogation of these firmly established principles would, in my opinion, create a most undesirable precedent. Moreover, such provisions would discriminate against all other claimants. While I would not object to a measure which would merely permit Sedgwick County to secure a judicial determination in the Court of Claims of the question as to whether the tax assessed against the property involved was lawful, without creating any new cause of action, I cannot approve a measure which would permit recovery of penalties and interest against the United States.

LA FAYETTE BREWERY, INC.

I am withholding approval of H. R. 1601, a bill "for the relief of the La Fayette Brewery, Inc."

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the La Fayette Brewery, Inc., of La Fayette, Ind., the sum of $5,642 in satisfaction of its claim for refund of the value of 89 canceled and 24 uncanceled internal revenue malt liquor stamps burglarized from its safe on January 28, 1944.

The claimant sustained a loss of malt liquor stamps in the manner and to the extent described above.

The record discloses that the claimant has been fully compensated by its insurance carrier, the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md., for the losses which it sustained as a result of the theft of the stamps in question. Due to the terms of the policy and an option elected thereunder, the present claim is being advanced in the name of the claimant, although the payment contemplated by this measure would actually constitute a payment to the insurance carrier.

It appears that the stolen canceled and uncanceled stamps were in varying denominations, some of which were designed for use in connection with the distribution of fermented liquor in barrels; others were to be used when such liquor was carried from the brewery by pipeline. The differences between these two methods of distribution necessarily require differing procedures with regard to the manner in which the fermented liquor stamps are employed. I am informed that, due to these differences, there is a very definite possibility that stamps for barrel distribution might be illegally used by an unscrupulous brewer but that there is little, if any, possibility that stamps covering pipeline distribution could be so used.

To require the Government to assume a risk which in no way was due to the negligent acts or omissions of its employees would manifestly be unwarranted. Risk-taking is the purpose for which insurance companies are established and for which they are paid premiums. On the other hand, it would be equally unwarranted to require an insurance carrier to pay compensation on account of a paper loss which, undoubtedly, will never result in an actual loss to the Government.

Consequently, on the basis of the facts in this case, I believe that the claimant should be compensated in an amount equal to the value of stolen stamps earmarked for payment of the tax on fermented liquors distributed by pipeline, but I do not believe that there is any justification whatsoever for the granting of an award covering the full value of all of the subject stamps which were stolen, as is proposed by the instant measure.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

HOUSING AND RENT ACT OF 1950

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include therein a letter which I have received from the President of the United States; and also ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, November 27, 1950.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As you know, the Housing and Rent Act of 1950 will eliminate rent control in all incorporated cities, towns, and villages after December 31, 1950, unless they have taken affirmative action by that date to continue such control. I strongly recommend that the Congress extend that date to March 31, 1951. Such an extension would not interfere with the authority local communities now have to decontrol rents when in their judgment it seems proper.

The present rent control law was enacted before the outbreak of hostilities in Korea. It was passed to provide for the orderly transition to a free rental market in a peacetime economy. There has been a marked change in the situation since the law was passed. The outbreak of aggression during recent months has compelled us to move rapidly to increase our military strength. We are expanding our Army, Navy, and Air Force. We are stepping up our production of defense items and increasing our industrial capacity. To carry out this program successfully and to safeguard our economy, it will be necessary to keep rents in vital defense areas from rising to unreasonable levels.

Therefore, we must consider anew the whole problem of rent control in relation to the pressures now being created by the defense program. We must look into the situation around reactivated military camps and installations so that servicemen and their families can be given necessary protection against rent gouging. We must prevent high rents from interfering with the recruiting of defense workers and their movement to defense jobs. We must consider the relation of rent control to the price and wage aspects of our stabilization program.

I realize that there is insufficient time for the Congress to make a full investigation of these problems and consider a new rent control law during the present session. Moreover, during the next few months it should be possible to form a more accurate judgment concerning the effects of our expanded defense program on rents and housing needs. The extension of the automatic decontrol date to March 31, 1951, will permit the Eighty-second Congress to give full consideration to the effects of our defense program and make whatever changes in the law may be necessary. Unless this extension is made, many communities may be decontrolled by the operation of the present law before they, or the Congress, have been able to examine the problems confronting them, and with results that may be damaging to the national defense.

I will appreciate it if you will take this matter up with your committee with a view to obtaining favorable action upon such an extension.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

HON. BRENT SPENCE,
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency,
The House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the letter which has just been read, which I received from the President, I have introduced a bill to extend the present Rent Control Act to March 31 of next year, in order that the new Congress may have opportunity to consider matters in status quo. There has been a great change in the condition of the Nation since the last act was passed.

Our military requirements have increased. It may be necessary to greatly enlarge existing military installations and to establish new ones. That would require a vast number of employees to be housed in their vicinities, and some protection must be given to them. We hope these conditions may not arise, but we must be prepared. Because of these conditions we would be recreant to our duty if we did not give the Eighty-second Congress the opportunity to reconsider the present law while it is still in effect.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE] may have leave of absence indefinitely, on account of attending to Government business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the "lame duck" session of the Eighty-first Congress: I may be a duck, but I am not a lame one. I still have plenty of fight in me and will continue to fight for right until stripped of my authority to speak on the floor of the House.

Let us start off the Eighty-second Congress with a slogan: "Stop spending, little lending, and no giving." Let us take care of America and keep America strong before all the resources left to America are squandered in foreign countries. The program now outlined by the State Department and the Foreign Affairs Committee will surely wreck this country. Change this policy, and do it at once.

One thing that I cannot recommend too strongly, is to keep Government functions to the minimum. Limit them and stop making them permanent. The Voice of America started out by spending $34,963,927; this was reduced to $26,000,000 in fiscal year 1948. Since that time the amount has been steadily increased and this year the Congress approved an appropriation of $110,000,000. Remember there are not many radios in Russia and other foreign countries. They just do not have them. Therefore over a hundred stations in this country broadcasting the Voice—and remember the subject and dialog in some of these broadcasts—seems extremely foolish to me.

During the past week it has been proposed that the Voice of America buy a 10-story building in New York City to carry on their work. Congress, stop this foolish move. Prohibit them from obligating themselves to purchase such a building for that purpose. I call upon you good, sensible Jeffersonian Democrats and you sound Republicans to put an end to these moves which keep adding and adding to the daily increasing cost of government. Another move to make the Voice radio permanent. Will the Eighty-second Congress have more sense and foresight than the Eighty-first? My prayer is that it will. It is only by cutting down the functions of government, talking and acting economy, and working for common-sense moves in government that this Nation will survive. We want more business in government and less Government in business.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am at this time introducing a joint resolution to redefine the intent of Congress:

Joint resolution to redefine the intent of Congress

Resolved, etc., That section 701 (a) of Public Law 814 of the Eighty-first Congress is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 701. Excess-profits tax.

"(a) The House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance are hereby directed to report to the respective Houses of Congress a bill for raising revenue and for combating inflation by the levying, collection, and payment of corporate excess-profits taxes and/or corporate defense profits taxes with retroactive effect to October 1, or July 1, 1950, said bill to originate as required by article I, section 7, of the Constitution. Said bill shall be reported as early as practicable during the Eighty-first Congress after November 15, 1950, if the Congress is in session in 1950 after such date; and if the Congress is not in session in 1950 after November 15, 1950, said bill shall be reported during the first session of the Eighty-second Congress, and as early as practicable during said session."

Mr. Speaker, the driving force of our country's industrial economy is seriously imperiled as the result of an apparent misconstruction of the intent of Congress expressed in section 701 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1950 by the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee. This section which received the overwhelming support of both political parties directed the Ways and Means Committee to as soon as practicable report a bill for raising revenue by means of a corporate excess-profits tax with retroactive effect to October 1 or July 1, 1950. Pursuant to this directive the Ways and Means Committee commenced public hearings on November 15 on which day the Secretary of the Treasury recommended to the committee that an additional $4,000,000,000 be raised by the imposition of the same type of an excess-profits tax which was levied during World War II.

The Republican minority on the committee have consistently taken the position that section 701 (a) was not intended by the Congress to preclude the committee from considering an excess-profits tax combined with alternate forms of increased corporate taxation. Moreover, we do not believe that the Congress intended the committee to be limited to a consideration of only the President's recommendations, or modifications of it, as was done during the public hearings.

But Republican efforts to broaden the narrow construction by the Democratic members of section 701 (a) and thereby expedite the work of the committee in preparing a tax bill have been consistently blocked and our recommendations for various combined or alternate proposals for taxing excessive profits and raising revenue have been ruled out of order.

The net result of this limited interpretation of the intent of Congress is that the Ways and Means Committee now faces an impossible task. On the one hand it is of the utmost importance that a revenue bill for siphoning off excessive war profits, combating inflation, and raising additional revenue through an increase in corporate taxes be swiftly enacted; and on the other hand, it is clear beyond any doubt that enactment of the President's recommendations would be highly inflationary and detrimental to our national economy.

In order, therefore, to solve this grave problem I am introducing a joint resolution to clarify the intent of Congress. As amended by my joint resolution the authority of the committee would be redefined so as to permit it to immediately report a bill not only for raising revenue but also to combat inflation by the levying of a corporate excess-profits tax and/or a corporate defense tax.

As amended by my resolution section 701 (a) would read as follows:

SEC. 701. Excess-profits tax.

The House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance are hereby directed to report to the respective Houses of Congress a bill for raising revenue and for combating inflation by the levying, collection, and payment of corporate excess-profits taxes and/or corporate defense profits taxes with retroactive effect to October 1, or July 1, 1950, said bill to originate as required by article I, section 7, of the Constitution. Said bill shall be reported as early as practicable during the Eighty-first Congress after November 15, 1950, if the Congress is in session in 1950 after such date; and if the Congress is not in session in 1950 after November 15, 1950, said bill shall be reported during the first session of the Eighty-second Congress, and as early as practicable during said session.

I am confident that my resolution will meet with the swift approval of the Congress because it will make it possible for the Ways and Means Committee to immediately prepare a tax bill which will raise additional revenue, stem inflation, and siphon off excessive corporate profits derived directly or indirectly from the war.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the immediate adoption of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

TROOP TRAIN WRECKED IN GEORGIA

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, we learned today over the radio that there was a train wreck in Georgia, a troop train. This is the second within a few months.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking for an investigation.

Our men who are fighting for us, defending our country, should have the best cars and the best engineers there are. The wrecks may be due to sabotage; anyway, the matter should be investigated.

RENT CONTROL

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, if I understood correctly, my very esteemed colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, Mr. SPENCE, has announced that he is introducing a resolution to continue rent control for 90 days.

Almost 6 months ago we decided here in this Congress that rent control was no longer a Federal problem, that henceforth it should be a local problem. The municipalities have had 6 months in which to determine whether rent controls should be continued in their cities beyond December 31, 1950. I think it is very unfortunate that at this particular time a resolution is introduced which might give the cities encouragement that rent control will be continued beyond that time. I think we should reevaluate rent control in the light of its lapse on December 31 in those cities which do not want to continue it.

THE LATE HONORABLE JOHN F. FITZGERALD

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, during the recess of the Congress, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the city of Boston were grieved by the death of the Honorable John F. Fitzgerald in the eighty-eighth year of his long and fruitful career.

Death came quietly before midnight on October 3 to one of the most genial and affectionate personalities who ever graced the political and civic stage in the city of Boston.

In a lifetime of public service extending over a period of 60 years, John F. as he was affectionately known by his host of friends, won honors at home and abroad for his diligent efforts to better the lot of his fellow men.

A native son of Boston, and one imbued with a keen sense of its history, John F. Fitzgerald who was the grandfather of our distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] spent the greater part of his energies in making his home city a finer and better place to live.

Throughout his long and colorful career, John Fitzgerald spent 6 years in the office of mayor of Boston, 6 years in this House as Congressman from his beloved district, a year in the common council of Boston, and the whole of his life in expending his great talents and prodigious energy in the service of his fellow citizens.

In the latter part of his life, he devoted almost all his time to the demanding duties of the port of Boston authority on which he served from 1934–1948. During those years he enjoyed the reward of seeing the port facilities restored to their former grandeur so that today Boston has better piers, finer docking facilities, and accommodations for the largest ships that sail the seas.

John F. Fitzgerald was the first son of Irish immigrants to be elected mayor of Boston. His formal education and his aspiration to become a doctor were cut off by the untimely death of his father, and after withdrawing from the Harvard Medical School, he became the father of a family consisting of his widowed mother and 7 younger brothers.

For over ten years he supported this family on the meager salary of a customs house clerk, and in 1891 he launched upon his prominent political career with election to the old Boston common council.

Thereafter, and successively, he went to the State senate of Massacusetts and to the Halls of Congress where he served from 1895 to 1901.

Returning to devote his administrative abilities and genius for Government to the home scene, he was elected mayor of Boston in 1906 and 1907, and in 1910 he was the first Boston mayor to be elected for a 4-year term.

Long in advance of the time when the people of this Nation came to look upon social legislation as commonplace, John F. Fitzgerald introduced bills to establish maximum hours for laborers, to establish workmen's compensation insurance systems and old-age pensions. In the early years of this century he was a leader in the struggle to establish the Australian ballot in order to prevent manipulation of elections by ward bosses and industrial owners.

While in this Congress he started his efforts to develop Boston Harbor and procured an $8,000,000 appropriation for its development when he was the only Democratic Congressman in the entire New England delegation. One of the greatest monuments to his memory is the present commonwealth pier in Boston.

His reverence and love for the lore of Massachusetts history led him to abolish the old Puritan "fast day" in Massachusetts and replace it with Patriots' Day in memory of the opening battle of the Revolutionary War.

In Washington, on Beacon Hill, and in the city hall on School Street, John F. Fitzgerald has left a record of intelligent, conservative, and humane legislation. In the hearts of all of the citizens of the commonwealth, and in the memories of his host of friends everywhere, he has left the imprint of his great and generous soul.

He shall be missed as one who spent all his energy in the service of his city, his State, and his Nation.

No man could have done more as a servant of his fellow man.

May he rest in peace.

Mr. Speaker, as part of my remarks I include the following editorials from Boston newspapers:

[From the Boston (Mass.) Globe]

JOHN F. FITZGERALD

Boston will remember John F. Fitzgerald not only as an ex-mayor and a formidable candidate in every one of the political campaigns he undertook, but also as a tireless worker for the city's growth and prosperity. It was he who, as mayor, initiated the bigger, busier, and better Boston campaign of the pre-World War I era. Forty years later as a zealous member of the Boston Port Authority, he was still guided by those ambitions.

His energy was boundless. As a member of the old common council, as a State senator, as a Congressman, as mayor for two terms, as an aspirant for the United States Senate and the governorship, as an appointed official and the adviser of younger Democrats, he was in public life for 55 years. Few men have had such long careers. None enjoyed his more.

The rest of the country, reading of his death, will remember him as the Boston exmayor who sang Sweet Adeline, the song with which he was more closely identified than its authors. It is probable that John F. Fitzgerald would like to be remembered as a man who was forever trying to arouse crowds to his own pitch of enthusiasm.

[From the Boston (Mass.) Herald]

JOHN F. FITZGERALD

Most Bostonians loved John F. Fitzgerald and mourn his passing. It is easy to understand why. He became a kind of symbol of the underprivileged Irish boy who made good in his chosen city. More than making good personally, he spent great time and effort in promoting the community he loved, in assisting the development of the port, in the improvement of educational opportunities for boys not able to go to college, and in many other ways. He was, indeed, dedicated to making Boston a better place in which to live.

We who write these columns feel a personal loss because, during the latter years in his life, the old gentleman would call us on the telephone with regularity, telling us straightforwardly what he liked about the current Boston situation and what he thought was bad. He never lost interest in anything that had to do with Boston town.

A special interest was in forwarding the recognition of his fellow Irish-Americans in the politics and commerce of this community. He did much to help them. It was a generous attitude for, not content with having gained power and recognition for himself, he wanted others of his kind to make their way, too.

We add our expression of sympathy to the many others which are being uttered these days for a man widely beloved, who served his city well.

JOHN F. FITZGERALD

It is an undeniable tradition, proven beyond debate, that America is the land of opportunity. Before our eyes, John F. Fitzgerald lived it. Son of immigrant parents, he sat in the Halls of Congress and in city hall. Having had his chance, made possible by his own diligence and ability, he was grateful.

Down the long, useful years that were given to him, he expressed that gratitude by becoming one of the greatest champions of the Hub in all its history. Inspired alone by an abiding love of his native heath, through New England, the Nation and beyond the seas he told the Boston story. And bigger, better, busier Boston is still the bright banner that it was when he first lifted it in a time when others thought that the city had lived its day.

No man was ever more conscious of historic Boston. In countless ways he demonstrated that. He brought the U. S. S. Constitution to the Hub for a home. He established April 19 as Patriots' Day. He launched the custom of reading the Declaration of Independence from the balcony of the Old State House.

But the very historic markers amid which he was born did not entice him to live in the past. He used them as stepping stones to help lead the way to Boston's prosperous present and from them, as an eminence, with vigor and vision that belied his decades, pointed to the future so bright and so promising that he has bequeathed to those who remain.

Eyes always on the future, the lifelong enthusiast for better tomorrows early saw who would be the inheritors. For their sake he founded the Franklin Park Zoo and the Boston Aquarium. That they might have their chance he established the High School of Commerce. For their well being he set up a child-hygiene system. And for their delight he erected the first Christmas tree on Boston Common.

The habit of doing for others he acquired early. Left motherless while young and then fatherless, he helped to raise seven brothers, caring for the home and working at the same time, sacrificing his hope of becoming a doctor and turning to public life as an outlet for his tremendous energy, which carried him smiling and singing through many bruising political campaigns.

On Beacon Hill, in Washington and on School Street, he left legislative records all bearing on making life more abundant for all the people and in particular for those who needed a helping hand. But his monument is the port of Boston, for he early recognized that a seaside city cannot live without ocean traffic and he refused to allow that flag to be hauled down from the mast.

Even when almost a lone voice in a wilderness of indifference or inattention, his zeal did not diminish, his hopes did not despair. He lived to see the dream that would not die made tangible with new piers which are now reaching welcoming arms to seaborne commerce from the ends of the earth. For this, "my own, my native land," no one man could do more.

Edwin Markham once wrote a piece of poetry which applies to his passing:

"As when a lordly cedar, green with boughs,
Goes down with a great shout upon the hills,
And leaves a lonesome place against the sky."

JOHN F. FITZGERALD

John F. Fitzgerald's death leaves a gaping void in the city of Boston. There will never be another like him because the gay, warmhearted era whose best qualities he typified is in history's discard. Now that he is gone, the people of Boston can take comfort from the memories of his 60 years of cheerful service to their city.

"Bigger, better, busier Boston." That was John F.'s slogan 50 years ago when he pioneered in the art of civic tub thumping. Always a Boston booster, he did far more than talk about it. He had more to do than anyone with the improvement of Boston Harbor and its opening to all the world's commerce. As Congressman, mayor, and just plain citizen he fought all his long life for the prosperity and welfare of the people of Boston.

"Perhaps with the coming of the twentieth century airships may be invented to sail from this country to other parts of the world. [Laughter.]" The words were those of Congressman John F. Fitzgerald in 1901, 2 years before the Wright brothers' first flight. The laughter came from his colleagues. John F. believed anything was possible, where there was a will to do it, and many of the miracles he believed in came to pass.

These miracles included heaping measures of welfare and comfort for the people he represented. He led the way in Boston in parks, playgrounds, schools, transportation. He never forgot the struggles, or the joys, of his people in the North End.

Some will remember him when they hear the strains of Sweet Adeline, which he used to sing in a golden voice that earned him the name "Honey Fitz." Real old-timers may remember that he was the champion greased-pig chaser of St. Stephen's Parish 3 years in a row. Almost everyone who ever came near him will think of John F. Fitzgerald's energy, good humor, and spirit as representing a great deal of what was good in Boston for the 87 years he was among us.

THE LATE HONORABLE PAUL STEWART

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to advise the House of the death on November 13 of my distinguished predecessor in this House, the late Honorable Paul Stewart of Antlers, Okla.

Mr. Stewart served with distinction in the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congresses from the Third District of Oklahoma. He retired voluntarily after two terms on account of his health.

Paul Stewart was born in Clarksville, Ark., on February 27, 1892. Son of a Presbyterian missionary, he was reared in the Choctaw Indian country of southeastern Oklahoma.

Prior to his election to Congress, Mr. Stewart had served 20 years in the Oklahoma State Legislature. He served two terms in the House of Representatives and was elected for a third term. He resigned as Representative to enter the race for State senator in a special election in 1926. During his career in the senate, he became one of the outstanding public officials of Oklahoma, holding every important office in that body up to and including that of president pro tempore.

Paul Stewart was a great American and a great Oklahoman. His death is a tremendous loss to our State and particularly to southeastern Oklahoma, known as Little Dixie, which he represented so long in the State legislature and in the Congress. It would be no exaggeration to state that practically every public monument, almost every highway, schoolhouse, and public building constructed in the area in which he lived, are monuments to his long years of faithful service. He was a part and parcel of the country which he helped to build.

Paul Stewart was a man of strong and definite convictions. He was one of the most courageous men I have ever known. He was never afraid to fight when he thought he was right. He succumbed while fighting a grass fire at his ranch house. He literally died with his boots on.

Paul Stewart was a man of broad experience and unlimited talents. He was a newspaper editor, a Congressman, senator, legislator, statesman, lawyer, cattleman, businessman, banker, humorist, and philosopher. His friends will miss him. Southeastern Oklahoma will miss him. The old man of the mountains is gone, but his handiwork remains as majestic, as towering, and as enduring as the lofty peaks of the Kiamichis which he knew so well and loved so much.

I extend my deepest sympathies to his bereaved wife and loved ones.

GENERAL LEAVE FOR OKLAHOMA MEMBERS TO EXTEND THEIR REMARKS

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the Oklahoma delegation may have permission to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

PAUL STEWART

Mr. STIGLER. Mr. Speaker, in the passing of the Honorable Paul Stewart of Antlers, Okla., a former colleague of ours, I lost a great friend and the southeastern part of my State lost a great builder.

He had a multitude of friends and was affectionately known as "The Ole Man of the Mountain" because he loved his section of our great State and was always ready to expend his entire time in promoting its best interest. The scenery to him was unsurpassed and second to none. Many times have I heard him extol the virtues of his home land.

It was my pleasure to know him for many years. He was a positive character-never equivocal. No one ever had to guess where he stood on any public issue. If he liked you there wasn't anything he wouldn't do for you and nothing was too good for his friends.

I served in our State senate with him. Before retiring, he was elected President pro tempore of that body and made an outstanding presiding officer.

Today a sense of deep grief pervades the souls of those who knew Paul Stewart during his lifetime. In our State he made an indelible imprint on the legislative history of his time. We deeply mourn our loss and extend to his fine family our deepest sympathy.

HERBERT A. MEYER

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to announce the untimely passing of a distinguished Member of this House, the Honorable HERBERT A. MEYER, who died October 2, 1950.

HERBERT MEYER served with distinction during the Eightieth and Eighty-first Congresses.

Prior to entering the political arena, he graduated from the Staunton Military Academy, the George Washington University, and the National University School of Law. He served as an officer of World War I and afterward became one of the distinguished and influential newspaper publishers of our State.

During his service in Congress, HUB MEYER, as he was familiarly known, was a hard fighter when dealing with problems in which he was particularly interested. He was a diligent worker. He was unassuming. He was the type of man upon whom the membership could depend. HUB MEYER had the respect and the friendship of Members on both sides of the aisle. He was a member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. He was an ardent worker for the servicemen and their dependents.

Only a short time before his death he was assigned to membership on the House Committee on Armed Forces. He devoted his career to public interest. He was a builder for the good of his community and for our country. He was fearless. He was courageous. He had a deep sense of justice. He had all of the attributes that go to make up a truly Christian gentleman. To his immediate family we extend our deepest sympathy.

I am reminded of Thomas Moore's immortal lines:

When I remember all
The friends so linked together,
I've seen around me fall,
Like leaves in wintry weather,
I feel like one
Who treads alone
Some banquet hall deserted,
Whose lights are fled,
Whose garlands dead,
And all but he departed.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may be permitted to extend their remarks on our late colleague at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I held the late Representative HERBERT A. MEYER in such high regard that I cannot permit this occasion to pass without adding my tribute of affection and respect to the eulogies of the others. I became acquainted with Mr. MEYER shortly after his election. We lived at the same hotel and it was not long before I knew why the people of Kansas sent HUB MEYER to Congress. Always reliable, a crusader for a cause in which he believed, and a violent opponent of principles and philosophies which he considered detrimental to the American way of life, he was a factor to be reckoned with in the Congress.

There is not much that I can add to what has been said here today that would not be repetitious. HUB MEYER has left a splendid heritage to his fine family and this is a better Congress because he served in it and this is a better world because he lived in it. To the fine wife we extend our genuine sympathy.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, although I had met Mr. MEYER when he first became a Member of the Eightieth Congress, I did not come to know the full measure of his talents until he acquired membership on the Committee on Armed Services. His attendance at the deliberations of that group was punctual and faithful; he was constantly alert and attentive and on many occasions he made valuable contributions from the wealth of his experience and the breadth of his knowledge and understanding. He was marked for greater and greater responsibilities in connection with the work of that committee. He had only nicely started with that work when he was suddenly taken from us. But he was with us long enough to have made a profound impression upon us with respect to his true character, his sober judgment, his patient tolerance, and his thorough Americanism.

Deeply though we may mourn his passing and generously extend our sympathy to his bereaved family, we are moved with abiding thankfulness that he lived and served with us; our lives have been made richer because of his presence; America is stronger because of the type of manhood which he represented and possessed in such abundance.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, news of the death of Hon. HERBERT MEYER brought to me not only a sense of the great loss to the public service but a personal grief as well. We became warm and intimate friends soon after his arrival in Washington to represent his district. He preceded me as a student at George Washington University and we had been members of the same fraternity. These and other circumstances brought us together, and I quickly developed an appreciation of his splendid qualities. We are all saddened by the interruption of a congressional career that had already gained wide recognition.

Tennyson's tribute to his friend might appropriately have been applied to HERBERT MEYER:

I would the great world grew like thee
Who grewest not alone in power
And knowledge, but by day and hour
In reverence and in charity.

There was a quiet charm and an obvious sincerity in his manner, and his devotion to the high standards of political service was universally approved. He will be greatly missed.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with my colleagues in paying a tribute of respect to the memory of HERBERT A. MEYER, of Kansas. I was deeply shocked to learn of his untimely passing. It was my privilege to serve with HERB MEYER in both the Eightieth and Eighty-first Congresses—we came to Congress at the same time, and he, like myself, was assigned to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. As a member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, it has been my privilege to know and admire the work of HERBERT MEYER. He was capable, conscientious, and energetic. He applied himself diligently to his duties. We served together as members of a special subcommittee concerned with Spanish-American War veterans' legislation. He was keenly interested in the welfare of all our American veterans. In addition to being an able representative of his people, he was a thorough gentleman, kind and modest, and the type of person one learns to genuinely like and admire. I regarded him as a fine friend and I deeply regret his passing.

I extend to his wife and members of his family my most sincere and heartfelt sympathy in the great loss which they have sustained.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, HUB MEYER, as we affectionately knew him, was too good a man, too valuable a man, too young a man, to die. However, I am sure we all recognize that death is inevitable and it is always imminent. Whenever the call comes there is not much we can do about it, but I think that as friends of the family of the departed one whom we have loved and respected and admired, we can all take great comfort in the fact that he was permitted to live and that the good things that he accomplished still live after him. I met HUB MEYER first when he came here to the Congress. I recognized in him one of the finest, gentlest, kindest men I ever knew, but who at the same time was strong and courageous and able. He was a man of integrity, of diligence, and of honesty. We on our side recognized his great ability. In the midst of the great controversy and conflict that has beset us in recent months and years, we saw fit to assign him to the great Committee on Armed Services, a committee which, as we all know, now carries a great responsibility for our country and for the world.

HUB MEYER had the respect of all of us who served with him here. I might add a further word out of a personal experience of mine with him. Last February he invited me to go out to his home town of Independence, Kans., to speak there in a great Republican rally in that area. I met and came to know his family there, and his friends. I visited in his home. I went about among the people who were there and observed their feelings toward HUB MEYER. I do not need to tell you who served with him here what a great man he was, but I certainly can say that equally was he great among the people whom he served so ably and so well in the House of Representatives.

I knew of his illness. I had hoped above everything else that he would recover, but he did not. He is no longer with us, except as he shall be here present in the memory of every one of us. All of us certainly mourn his passing. We say to his family and his friends how sorry we are that he is gone, and offer them the note of comfort that can come from the hearts and the minds of true friends.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, the death of Hon. HERBERT A. MEYER on October 2, 1950, shortly after the beginning of the congressional recess was a great shock to me as it was to his many friends everywhere. I had known of his illness but all reports indicated that he was rapidly recovering. I had hoped that he would soon be able to return to his family and friends in Kansas.

My acquaintance with HUB MEYER was not long as time goes. I first met him after his nomination for Congress in 1946, and had no opportunity to really become acquainted until the Eightieth Congress met in January 1947. That acquaintance developed into a friendship which became closer as the years went by and I shall always regard my association with HUB MEYER as one of the happiest experiences of my congressional career.

HUB MEYER came to Congress with a long and varied background of business experience. He had a fine mind and a good education. He had a record of success in all of his undertakings. His work in Congress was no exception. I have never known a man in my congressional experience who was more eager to do a good job; who took his duties more seriously; or who carried them out more faithfully than HUB MEYER. As he became familiar with congressional work, he asked for harder and more important assignments, not because he was looking for honor or glory but because he craved the opportunity to render the greatest possible service. It was in recognition of his ability and his splendid record that only a few weeks before his death he was given a place upon the great Armed Services Committee, so important at this time of world turmoil and conflict.

HUB MEYER was a Christian gentleman in the fullest and best sense of the word. He was a man of the highest principles. His patriotism and courage were apparent to all. In his personal relationships he was gentle, tolerant, and unassuming. He had a great gift for friendship and I know of no man who had finer or truer friends than HUB MEYER.

He leaves to mourn him his gracious wife and his fine capable son. To them I extend my heartfelt sympathy and the hope that they will be given the strength to carry their heavy burden.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. Speaker, in the earlier days of our service here we frequently witness the passing of older Members whom we respect and admire. We regret their loss and honor their memory. The real shock and the deepest sense of personal bereavement does not reach us, however, until death begins to take the comrades who entered Congress with us and with whom we have served in close companionship.

HUB MEYER and I became Members of Congress the same day. He was one of the first with whom I became acquainted, and that acquaintance developed into a fast friendship and close association, so that we spent many hours together in the Office Building, in the Restaurant, and in the House during the 4 years that followed. It is hard for me to believe he is gone, and I shall miss him so deeply that I can comprehend and share the grief of the family he loved so well.

HERBERT A. MEYER had a keen and analytical mind, and was a master of English. He did not speak frequently in the House, but when he did so his addresses merited and received the attention of his colleagues. I am inclined to believe that he made an even greater contribution to our thinking in the newsletters that he prepared for the information of his constituents. Many of us requested and received copies. An editor and newspaperman of years' experience, he was peculiarly able to analyze legislation and spread it upon the written page, so that it clarified our thinking. His reports and editorials must have been of inestimable value to the people of his district. He was frank, fair, fearless, and faithful to his duties. He was a hard-working Congressman.

But above all we shall treasure in our memories the human side of HUB MEYER. A byproduct of his analytical mind was his keen and acute sense of humor. His humor was not the bitter and biting kind that wounds. It was the warm and friendly kind that gave a shrewd appraisal of our problems and at the same time relieved the tension of our life here with a little light and laughter. It is no wonder he was loved and sought after by his colleagues.

Over whatever seas he is sailing
Whatever strange winds fan his brow.
What company rare he's regaling,
I know it is well with him now.
And when my last voyage I am making
May I go, as he went, unafraid,
And the pilot that guided him taking,
May I make the same port he has made.

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, when I read in a newspaper in Oregon, while on my vacation, of the death of HERBERT A. MEYER I was as shocked as though a member of my family had passed away. During Hub's term of service here in Congress he had become one of my best friends. In fact, he was one of my regular breakfast cronies and our bantering back and forth was a sort of relaxation from some of the problems of our troubled world. It is true that we were in general accord on our political philosophy and that, of course, added to the depth of our friendship. The death of such a man is indeed a great loss to the country in these trying times.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my tribute to the statements that have been made concerning the death of our colleague, the Honorable HERBERT A. MEYER, of Kansas, who served with distinction during the Eightieth and Eighty-first Congresses.

I knew him quite well, having visited him in his own home town of Independence, Kans. He was a real American and a true Christian gentleman.

Congressman MEYER was a modest man. He sought nothing more by way of reward than performing his tasks to the limit of his ability. He was gentle and kind. His dealings with his fellow Congressmen displayed his great ability and his high intelligence contributed to make him a highly respected and deeply appreciated Member of the House. His advice and counsel will be sorely missed. His sudden passing touches us deeply, and to his bereaved family I extend my sincerest sympathy.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest shocks I have had since I have been a Member of this body was the sad news of the passing of HERBERT A. MEYER, of Kansas.

Someone has described the friendships that grow up between Members on different sides of this aisle as the "flowers that overhang the walls of party politics."

In all my experience as a Member of Congress I have never met any man for whom I had a warmer friendship or for whom I had a higher regard, or greater admiration than I had for HERBERT A. MEYER, who served on the Veterans' Affairs Committee, of which I am chairman. I believe I knew him as well as any other Member of Congress. His devotion to his country rose high above the scramble for party vantage or the noisy clamor of men for place and power. He put the welfare of his country above all other considerations. He was a man of honor and integrity—a Christian gentleman, if you please, a real American.

His life was gentle, and the elements
So mixed in him that nature might stand up
And say to all the world, "This was a man."

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I was deeply shocked at the passing of HUB MEYER. There was no man who ever came to the Congress who had higher ideals. There was no man who was more anxious to give to the country a finer portrayal of the Congress, of its dignity, and of all that was fine and noble in the membership of the Congress.

As you all know, he was the editor and publisher of a newspaper. He always wanted to give through his newspaper, through his editorials, the things that would help the country and the things that have helped the people of the country. I had the honor to be chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs when he first came to Congress. I want the Members to know what a loyal and fine Member he was for the veterans and how much help he was to the chairman and everyone else on that committee. The veterans never had a truer friend than he and the country never had a finer American. I mourn with his wife at his passing. He leaves behind a lovely and delightful helpmeet. They were devoted to each other. We will miss him more than we know as the days go by. Today, Mr. Speaker, we need men of his caliber.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, when HERBERT A. MEYER was first stricken with virus pneumonia his secretary and his son from Kansas came hurriedly to my office and asked me if I would be kind enough to make a radio broadcast for Mr. MEYER. I replied to them I would be only too happy to do so, and with the permission of the House I would like to insert at this point in the RECORD the radio broadcast I made for HERBERT A. MEYER shortly before his passing.

Mr. Speaker, this is what I said about HERB MEYER before he died, not afterward. I am very happy he knew before he died what I thought of him. He had always known it. So did his family. Nothing I could say now would change my honest opinion.

Mr. Speaker, the following is the address I gave on September 23, 1950, about our late and lamented colleague, Hon. HERBERT A. MEYER:

Mr. SHORT. My good friend, HUB MEYER, is laid up with the virus pneumonia bug and so instead of being at home with you folks of the Third District, as he had planned at this time, he is in the Naval Hospital in Bethesda, Md., to give the doctors a change to get that bug out of his system.

Now I want to talk to you folks about HUB MEYER, although you probably know him even better than I do. But I know more about his work in Congress since we work side by side in Washington. I probably don't need to tell you that HUB MEYER is hard working. He is one of the hardest working Members we have in Washington. I understand that he made a promise to you folks back there in the Third District about staying on the job. He has kept that promise. In fact, he has kept it so well that he got so tired out that virus pneumonia bug had a chance to get in its dirty work on him.

As you probably know, I am the ranking Republican on the House Committee on Armed Services. I can tell you that when there was a minority vacancy on our committee, that the Republican leadership leaped at the opportunity to get HUB MEYER in on that extremely important committee and he was selected by unanimous consent, something that rarely ever happens. Why did we want him on our committee? The answer to that is very simple. His voting record showed that he was not only a real Republican from our great Middle West, but a party man with courage to express his own convictions.

Because of the utter failure of the Democratic administration in its foreign policy as well as its domestic policy, we find that we are going to be compelled to live under a semimilitary state. That means that the House Armed Services Committee is certainly one of the most important committees in the House. On this committee we need men who will not only give thought and study to the problems of our national defense but to see that we have adequate defense without turning this great Republic of ours into a rigid military state.

HUB MEYER'S diligence toward any job he undertakes, his keen intelligence, coupled with his experience as an officer in the Army Air Corps in World War I and his past experience on the Veterans' Affairs Committee in the House, make him the perfect selection. Since he has served on our Armed Services Committee, he has made valuable contributions; not only to you people he represents, but to the country's defense. We cannot afford to lose the services of a man like this.

Now when you elected HUB MEYER as your Representative for the last two terms, you elected a real American and a real Republican. Your Representative is not traveling down any broad socialistic highway. His voting record shows that. His attitude has always been to give the American people sound money, sound government, free enterprise, individual freedom, a chance to use their own talents and even make their own mistakes. HUB MEYER believes in letting people take home the money they earn and pay their own taxes.

He has stood out consistently against reckless spending and a hand-out "gimmie" State in this country. He has voted for the elimination of Communists and fellow travelers in our Government and for their fearless exposure.

He has voted for adequate labor legislation to protect the general public interest and the individual worker from dominating labor bosses.

He has voted in favor of sound fiscal policies in this country with cuts in unnecessary expenditures. HUB MEYER does not believe in politics as usual, business as usual, when our men are fighting and dying on the bloody battlefields of Korea.

He knows we have to tighten our belts but he also insists that this Democratic administration tighten its belt by eliminating their socialized medicine, socialized farm and other crackpot schemes which have no place in American lives even in normal times.

He does not go along with the President who has made 38 Cabinet changes in 5½ years, who accuses the courageous Marines, right now spearheading the invasion of Seoul, of having a propaganda machine similar to the Kremlin. He does not go along with these men in high places who like "good old Joe," and have appeased him to the extent that today our national life is in grave danger and time is short to prepare for what may be an all-out attack on our country. He doesn't go along with the President who does not turn his back on Acheson who does not turn his back on Alger Hiss, the convicted traitor. He does not go along with the Tydings "whitewash" committee who fails to do their sacred duty of ferreting out these Communists and fellow travelers in the State Department and other Government agencies.

HUB MEYER stands for true Americanism. He stands for honesty in Government. We Republicans who fight side by side with him to preserve our country and our republican form of government know of his great patriotism and his hard work in connection with legislation for the good of the country as a whole and not for small segments of our population alone. He knows there can be no security for anyone in a bankrupt nation.

HUB MEYER also knows that the executive branch is in the hands of small, cheap men, catering to pressure groups, grabbing support wherever they can even to the extent of putting on their fund-raising campaign a man whose handbook and racketeering clients are appearing before the Kefauver Crime Investigating Committee in the Senate. Only the pressure of outraged citizens forced the withdrawal of this man's name.

HUB MEYER has fought against forcing the American taxpayer to carry on his back all the Socialist countries in the world, while at the same time developing a socialistic system in America through deficit financing. He realizes that under this present administration that we are simply mortgaging the coming generations for political panaceas and that this vicious circle of inflation will have but one result—the crash of our financial structure.

HUB MEYER has objected strenuously and has voted against throwing away American tax dollars down the socialistic rat holes of Europe while at the same time denying such necessary domestic programs as flood control and the conservation of our own resources. He has voted consistently for American principles and against the subversion of these same principles toward political ends.

Some bitter invectives have been thrown against him, as against all of us, who have dared to stand in opposition to the little men in power, those men who brand anyone who dares to stand against this craving for power as being agents of the Kremlin or giving comfort to communism.

Today we are paying the bitter price of a political administration whose record of folly and failure are written for all to see. Secret agreements arrived at secretly and withheld from the American people—illegal treaties never passed upon by the Senate of the United States—illegal undeclared little wars disguised as police actions—the catering to powerful pressure groups and reckless promises of something for nothing—all these HUB MEYER has voted against relentlessly.

It is not too late as yet. A Republican Congress can force the President to operate the executive branch under Constitutional Government. They can compel the President to be the President of all the people, and not of Pendergast ward-heel political groups.

Today and in the future, because of the sell-out at Yalta, confirmed by the President at Potsdam, where he learned to like "good old Joe" men will be called from their homes and jobs and their families in an endeavor to stop the colossus raised by the failure of the Democrat foreign policy for the last 18 years and the recognition of Communist Russia in 1933 after the refusal of three Republican Presidents to recognize this power.

We will be living under controls. We will have to lower our standard of living and each and every one of us will be affected. Now this same group of little men are crying for a continuation of the power which has brought us to this state we are in today, crying that any who opposes them are giving comfort to our enemies.

Our only hope to survive and to protect ourselves both at home and abroad is through the election of real Americans like HUB MEYER to Congress. Our only salvation lies with men of integrity, wisdom, experience, capabilities, and a burning patriotism. You have such a Congressman in HUB MEYER Send him back. We need him.

Mr. Speaker, since giving the above address, HUB MEYER has passed to his eternal reward. His innumerable friends mourn his passing and pray that his noble example will forever remain a comfort and an inspiration to all who follow.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my sincere condolences to HUB MEYER's family. I happened to know HUB MEYER socially, quite apart from my knowledge of him in the House of Representatives. It is with deepest grief that I learn only this morning of his passing. He was a fine, able man, a high-minded man, and his memory will inspire us all in our devotion to duty.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 868) and ask for its immediate consideration.

All dues are received without designation as to the purpose for which the money is to be spent. Expenditures listed under E total $10,449.59, and total receipts shown on line 9 of schedule D are stated at the same amount. Total dues prorated for the 9 months from January 1 to September 30, 1950, amount to $466,747.47. Hence less than 2¼ percent of the total dues for the period could be allocable to legislative activities. In our opinion the amount shown in schedule E is high. Consequently legislative activity is not a principal purpose of this association. Total dues in excess of $500 have been received during the period January 1 to September 30, 1950, from only the following in addition to those mentioned in our last report: Aircraft gas turbine division, General Electric Corp., Schenectady, N. Y.; Lockheed Aircraft Corp., Burbank, Calif.

C. (2) Legislation affecting the petroleum industry.

The following statement, included in Form A, filed April 2, 1948, is made a part hereof:

"The American Petroleum Institute (the 'institute' or 'API') is a national trade association of the petroleum industry.

"The institute has been advised by counsel and believes that it is not now subject and has not previously been subject to the provisions of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (the 'act' and that it is not now required and has not previously been required to file any reports or statements under the act. The institute does not collect any funds to be used principally to aid in, nor is the principal purpose of the institute to aid in, influencing directly or indirectly the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the United States.

"Despite the fact that the institute expends only a very small portion of its funds for purposes which bear any relation to Federal legislation, the Department of Justice has expressed the view that the institute is subject to the act. Pending an authoritative construction of the act by the courts, the institute is filing this statement. By doing so, however, it does not admit that it is subject to the provisions of the act or that it is required to file this statement."

D. (1) $3,340; (4) $10; (7) $3,350; (8) $22,798; (9) $26,148; (13) yes; (14) the institute does not receive any contributions for the purposes designated in subparagraph (a)

or (b) of section 307 of the act. Its revenues are received from annual membership dues, from the sale at cost of its publications, and from contributions from individuals or companies engaged in the oil and allied industries. Some of the contributions received are earmarked for specific purposes, such as research projects, but no contributions are earmarked for the purposes designated in subparagraph (a) or (b) of section 307. To the extent that any of the funds of the institute may be deemed to be expended for such purposes, such expenditures are made out of the general funds of the institute, that is out of unearmarked funds collected for the general management and operation of the institute and its over-all functions. In view of item 2 (c) of the instructions issued March 31, 1950, relating to receipts of multipurpose organizations, 1.5 percent of the general dues and contributions received during the period of this report is shown in item D (1) and 1.5 percent of the receipts from sale of printed matter during such period is shown in item D (4). It is contemplated that reports filed in the year 1951 will use a similar ratio based on 1950 figures. In accordance with the last sentence of item 2 (c) of the instructions, there is listed in the schedule furnished in compliance with item D (14) the name of every person who contributed a total of $500 or more to the institute's general funds during the applicable period even though such persons did not make their contributions solely for legislative purposes. A. Associated General Contractors of America, Inc., Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.; trade association.

C. (1) This association is continuously interested in all types of legislation affecting the construction industry. No funds are received or expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation.

C. (2) The association does not believe that its activities fall within the provisions of the Lobbying Act. (See detailed statement of activities set forth in letter filed under date of January 3, 1947, and letter filed under date of February 24, 1949, both incorporated herein by reference.) The association follows closely developments in the legislative field (including appearances befor congressional committees) for the purpose of reporting the facts fully to its membership at frequent intervals. Mr. Burt L. Knowles of the association is assigned to follow legislative developments while Congress is in session, and it is estimated that possibly two-thirds of his time is devoted to this assignment. During the third quarter of 1950 it is estimated that $1,350 might be apportioned to this particular activity. It is estimated that expenses, other than Mr. Knowles' salary, based on the time of the staff employees required for the analysis and dissemination of the many types of legislation, existing or proposed, on behalf of the membership in the third quarter would approximate $3,750.

C. (3) A bulletin is sent to the membership by the association at intervals, setting forth pertinent developments in the construction field. This deals with all phases of its activities, including legislative reference.

B. National Association of Electric Companies, 1200 Eighteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C. The National Association of Electric Companies is a trade association whose members are 102 operating electric companies. The preamble of its articles of association describe the functions to be engaged in by the association as follows: "In order to further the interests of the electric utility companies that are members of this association and their investors, employees and customers; to maintain the integrity and credit of the industry; to present to the public the essential facts about the industry to the end that there may be a better understanding between the utility companies and the public and a better appreciation of utility progress, achievements and problems; to coordinate regional activities among member companies; to furnish member companies information, reports and statements concerning various phases of electric utility operations and developments; to further cooperation with all agencies and organizations interested in the supply and purchase of electric light and power; to furnish such agencies and organizations with information, reports and statements concerning member companies and the electric utility industry; to present the facts to the public concerning the public benefits resulting from the operation of electric utility companies by businessmen under governmental regulations and, generally, to engage in those practices recognized as being legal and proper to further said ends, certain electric utility companies do hereby establish a national association which shall be adequately qualified and empowered to act in every lawful way when concert of policy and action would be helpful." Thus the association functions for the following principal purposes: (1) To keep member companies informed of Washington developments affecting them as operating businesses, including information and analyses of governmental hearings, orders, and regulations, both legislative and administrative; (2) To keep the public, including employees, consumers, and investors, informed concerning the accomplishments of the industry, its achievements in serving the public, and the plans of this industry for the future; (3) To furnish—and aid in furnishing—technical information to the instruments of government and to provide a readily available contact between Government and the industry; (4) To provide the members of the association with a medium through which they can exchange ideas on problems of mutual concern and interest in order to better serve the public; (5) To act for the member companies in matters of common and national concern.

A. Mrs. J. L. Blair Buck, president, General Federation of Women's Clubs, 1734 N Street NW., Washington, D. C. The General Federation of Women's Clubs is a national and international organization, with an affiliated membership of some 11,000,000. One-half of the members are in the United States, the Territories and possessions, and in 14 affiliated national organizations. The General Federation does not represent or dictate the policies of these national organizations. The object of the General Federation is "to unite the women's clubs and like organizations throughout the world for the purpose of mutual benefit, and for the promotion of their common interest in education, philanthropy, public welfare, moral values, civics, and fine arts." The General Federation is nonpartisan and nonpolitical. The major interests of the clubs are along educational and welfare lines—to provide adequate educational opportunities for children and adults; to promote better care for the mentally and physically ill; to conserve natural resources; to further interest in music, literature, and art; and to foster better international relations. The General Federation of Women's Clubs employs no professional lobbyist. What active interest the organization takes in legislation at any time is only incidental to the general policies. Authority for supporting or opposing legislation is provided through the adoption of a resolution in national convention. During the first quarter of 1950 the General Federation submitted statements in support of ERA, forest conservation, the International Trade Organization appropriations and Alaska statehood. No formal statements have been submitted during the second quarter. The department of legislation is one of the eight departments of the General Federation. This department, together with divisions and committee, the Council of International Clubs and the Junior Clubs, receives supervision, counsel, and aid from the president. Much of the president's time is necessarily spent visiting State organizations. In the interest of international good will the General Federation sends representatives to visit groups in other countries. The General Federation president and the chairman of legislation are volunteer workers. For all the activities of the General Federation the operating income—received mainly from dues—was approximately $162,000 for the fiscal year ending March 1950. The General Federation received no contributions to be used for lobbying. It is impossible to evaluate how much of the income is used for the comparatively small amount expended in submitting statement to Congress, for telegrams, postage, and miscellaneous.

B. Not employed for pay. The president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs supports or opposes legislation, and asks the organization membership to do likewise, when authority for such action has been provided through the adoption of a resolution is national convention.

C. (1) Term of office as president of the General Federation expired the latter part of May 1950.

D. (7) $865. NOTE.—The president of the General Federation receives no salary or fees. A nominal amount is allowed for travel and miscellaneous expense in connection with the over-all activities of the organization.

A. Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc., 205 East Forty-second Street, New York, N. Y.

C. This committee was incorporated March 5, 1941. Its purposes, as stated in its certificate of incorporation, are: "To uphold constitutional government and the system of free enterprise, with equal opportunity for all, which the Constitution establishes, by nonpartisan educational efforts reaching citizens throughout the United States regardless of their political affiliations." Since its incorporation in 1941, this committee has, now does, and will continue to educate the citizens of the United States, regardless of their political affiliations, in the principles of constitutional government and free enterprise, established by our Constitution and in sound economic principles in general. When issues involving constitutional principles and/or the free enterprise system are publicly raised, this committee distributes the best available material (books, pamphlets, newsletters) to its supporters and leadership individuals across the country, urging them to study the principles involved and to raise their voices for constitutional government and free enterprise and sound economic policies. If these issues reach the stage of proposed legislation, then committee supporters who express their views to their representatives in Washington, may, in the broadest sense of the term, be said to have "legislative interests." No one is employed by the committee mainly for the purpose of influencing legislation. The committee takes no stand with reference to the private interest of any group or individual in pending legislation. It seeks to uphold the basic principles of economics and of personal and economic freedom, as established by the Constitution. The committee offers the results of its research to the general public and sometimes to the Members of Congress. The committee's activities during this quarter were in accordance with its objectives and its long established procedures.

C. (1) Legislative interests of the Cooperative League are incidental to its main purposes as stated above. However, such legislative interests are continuing ones since they concern (a) the over-all problem of agriculture and the preservation of the family-sized farm, (b) defense of the general public interest of the American people, and (c) representation of the interest of the people as consumers, and (d) the defense of the right of any group of people voluntarily to organize cooperative business enterprises without discrimination against them on the part of Government, and the securing of such enabling legislation for this purpose as may from time to time be necessary, (e) conservation of natural resources, and (f) the extension of true economic freedom and the combating of monopoly.

C. (2) Specific legislative interests of the past 3 months have been (a) the Revenue Act of 1950 and (b) the appropriation for carrying out the point 4 program.

B. National Association of Home Builders, 1028 Connecticut Avenue NW., Washington, D. C.; trade association.

C. (1) Indefinitely.

C. (2) I am not employed to support or oppose any legislation, but as executive vice president of the National Association of Home Builders, the trade association of the home building industry. My employment is not dependent upon rendition of services which might be considered lobbying within the meaning of the regulation of the Lobbying Act. I have been advised by counsel and believe that I am not subject to that act, but this report is filed under protest and as a matter of personal precaution in view of the indefiniteness of the act and the lack of judicial interpretation thereof. This filing is not intended in any way to constitute an admission by me that I am subject to the act. This report is filed because I supervise, among other things, the work of that association's legislative department. In that supervisory capacity I am interested in all legislation affecting the home building industry. During the quarter covered by this report, such legislation included: Public Law 774, Defense Production Act of 1950; S. 3746, H. R. 8924, a bill to authorize the creation of private mortgage corporations and to modify the Government's secondary market for FHA-insured and VA-guaranteed residential mortgages; S. 4145, a bill to assist the national defense by authorizing the provision of housing at reactivated military installations, and for other purposes.

C.; with respect to the Correlator, 22,000 copies were run in July, August, and September by the Darby Printing Co., Washington, D. C.; I also write an article each month for the American Builder, a monthly trade publication devoted to the interests of the housing industry (publisher: Simmonds Boardman Publishing Co., Chicago and New York); news releases are from time to time sent to the Associated Press, INS, UP, and other national newspaper wire services by the association for publication in subscriber papers and magazines, some of which releases may contain material which might be considered as affecting legislation directly or indirectly; neither the association nor I have any means of ascertaining a complete list of the publications utilizing such releases; in the course of the operations of the association numerous inquiries are received from representatives of various newspapers, magazines, and other publications for information and material to be used in the preparation of articles concerning housing and, in some cases, pending legislation; I do not understand that the furnishing of such information or material constitutes "causing such article to be published" within the meaning of the act; therefore, and because of the physical impossibility of keeping an accurate account of such situations, no detailed report thereof is made.

B. American Petroleum Institute, 50 West Fiftieth Street, New York, N. Y.

C. (1) Not determined.

C. (2) Legislative interest related to excise tax on lubricating oils only.

D. (5) I am senior partner in the law firm, Dow, Lohnes, and Albertson, Munsey Building, Washington, D. C. I am a special representative of the American Petroleum Institute in Washington, D. C., without general authority to act for the Institute but with authority to act only in connection with specific subject matters. The Institute is interested in, and is opposed to, a continuation of the existing excise tax on lubricating oils; for that purpose I have been assisted by Donald C. O'Hara who is connected with my office and who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee at a public hearing in opposition to the continuation of the tax on lubricating oils; there was substantially no other activity on his part or on my part in connection with this particular tax and, under the circumstances, the sum of $600 would be ample for all services rendered by Mr. O'Hara or myself for the period January 1, 1950, to September 30, 1950, both inclusive, in that connection.

C. (1) Not determined.

C. (2) The Committee for Pipe Line Companies is interested in, and is opposed to S. 571, which, if enacted, would divorce pipe lines that are subject to the Interstate Commerce Act from their existing owning companies.

D. (5) I am senior partner in the law firm, Dow, Lohnes, and Albertson, Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.; I am general counsel for the Committee for Pipe Line Companies, Tulsa, Okla.; this is a committee whose representatives are connected with pipe line companies that are subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the Interstate Commerce Act; the Committee for Pipe Line Companies has made a report of receipts and disbursements for the 9 months ending September 30, 1950, to which reference is made; attention is called to the fact that I am informed that this report is a complete report of all receipts and disbursements for the period stated; it therefore covers all of the activities of the Committee for Pipe Lines Companies; in other words, it is the current budget of the committee covering all of its activities, including any, but not confined to, activities affecting legislation; the pipe lines that are subject to the Interstate Commerce Act have no trade association organization such as those which represent other media of transportation. They are, however, represented by a committee composed of individuals that represent the regulated pipe line companies; I am general counsel for that committee and as such have the responsibilities of an attorney for all the activities of the committee including those, if any, which may involve Federal legislation; the Committee for Pipe Line Companies is interested in, and is opposed to the enactment of S. 571, which, if enacted, would result in the divorcement of pipe line companies from the companies which have constructed and owned them. No hearings have been held on S. 571 during the quarter ended September 30, 1950, and I have engaged in no activities in connection with this proposed legislation or any other legislation and have not engaged in any activities for the Committee for Pipe Line Companies which fall within the provisions of the so-called Lobbying Act; the amount of my time devoted to consideration of S. 571 in any respect whatever would be amply covered by the compensation of $500.

E. (11) $827.33; the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States does not believe it is subject to the provisions of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act. It retains the law firm of Milbank, Tweed, Hope, and Hadley of 15 Broad Street, New York, N. Y., to represent it generally in legal matters; these legal matters involve a wide variety of services by a number of partners and employees of such firm; an incidental and minor part of the professional services rendered by such firm involves the consideration of proposed legislation relating to Federal taxes by Weston Vernon, Jr., of that firm; Mr. Vernon has filed a registration statement on Form B with the Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate, wherein he states that he does not believe he is subject to the provisions of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act and that any Federal tax legislative work performed by him for the Equitable Life Assurance Society comprises only an incidental and minor part of his duties; the Eqiutable Life Assurance Society has been advised, and the undersigned believes, that none of the activities of Mr. Vernon are subject to the provisions of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act; if any of his activities are subject to the provisions of said act, however, the Equitable Life Assurance Society has been informed that the records of Milbank, Tweed, Hope, and Hadley show that no portion of the fees paid or to be paid to Milbank, Tweed, Hope, and Hadley might be attributed to said activities during the third quarter of 1950, and there were no disbursements pertaining to any such activities.

C. (1) No legislative activity during third quarter.

C. (2) As reported in all prior reports heretofore filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate, the sole legislative interest of the registrant to date has involved the repeal or reduction of the Federal excise tax on business and store machines as presently imposed by section 3406 (a) (6) of the Internal Revenue Code. A reduction of this tax was approved by the House of Representatives when it passed H. R. 8920. Such excise-tax reductions, however, were subsequently stricken by the Senate Finance Committee for the following reasons (S. Rept. 2375, 81st Cong., 2d sess.): "Military action in Korea, coupled with substantial increases in defense and related expenditures, has made it necessary to convert the excise-tax-reduction bill passed by the House in June of this year into a bill to raise revenues." The fact of this final action was anticipated by the registrant prior to the close of the preceding quarter. Further legislative activity in connection with said proposed excise tax relief was therefore made unnecesary. During the quarter herein reported the registrant engaged in no legislative activity and collected no funds nor expended any moneys in pursuance of any Federal legislation.

A. James A. Kennedy, 67 Broad Street, New York, N. Y., vice president and general attorney of American Cable & Radio Corp., and subsidiaries; my principal functions are as an attorney.

B. American Cable & Radio Corp., 67 Broad Street, New York, N. Y., and subsidiaries, All American Cables and Radio, Inc., the Commercial Cable Co., and Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co.; these said subsidiaries are engaged in the international telegraph communications business.

C. (1) Legislative interest is not now current due to the studies being made by the President's Communication Policy Board as mentioned in (2) herein; it is presumed that interest will resume in several months.

C. (2) I am interested in legislation which would permit the merger of international telegraph companies; no legislation is now pending although a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the Senate has an investigation on the subject under way; also, the President has appointed a Communication Policy Board to study and recommend on the same subject.

D. (13) No; I have been for several years vice president and general attorney of American Cable & Radio Corp., and its subsidiaries, the Commercial Cable Co., All America Cables and Radio, Inc., and Mackay Radio and Telegraph Co., all engaged in the international telegraph business. In said capacity, a part of my regular duties has always been to appear in hearings, conferences and other meetings before Government departments and agencies in Washington. Some time ago my company directed me, purely as an incidental part of my duties, to speak with Members of Congress and other Government agencies in favor of legislation which would permit the merger of telegraph companies engaged in international business. My salary for the past several years has been $22,500 per annum, which is payment for all of my services and no part of which is for the purpose of influencing legislation. In addition to my salary, my railroad fare, hotel, and incidental expenses incurred in trips to and from New York, my headquarters, and Washington are paid by my employer, no part of which, however, is expended for the purpose of influencing legislation. Likewise, occasionally I have Government officials for luncheon or dinner and call them over the telephone. I would say that all of these total incidental expenses do not run over $100 per month. This statement is intended to supply the information requested in D (5), D (7), D (8), D (9), and E (6), E (7), E (9), E (11), and E (15). The Lobbying Act would appear inapplicable in my case; however, I have made no objection to filing under the same and if this description is not sufficient, I will be glad to furnish any further information desired.

B. The American Legion. 700 North Pennsylvania Street. Indianapolis, Ind.

C. (1) on a yearly basis.

C. (2) A statement is set forth showing the general legislative interests of the American Legion and the work performed in connection therewith:

"The American Legion and all veterans of World War I and World War II and their dependents on all matters affecting their care, rehabilitation, hospitalization, reeducation, and housing; all matters affecting the general welfare of our country with regard to national defense. Americanism, included in which is opposition to all subversive activities, with particular attention to our immigration and naturalization laws. Child welfare, not only for children of veterans but for all children; aid and assistance to veterans in agriculture development; matters dealing with our foreign policy and foreign relations; the development of sound civil aviation programs and policies, and the development of sound and progressive programs for the employment and reemployment of veterans in civilian pursuits and in civil service; legislation which would eliminate all improper discriminations and be of benefit to the men and women who are still in our armed services, and all other matters included in the mandates and programs of the American Legion as adopted and approved by the national convention of the American Legion and/or by its national executive committee, which are the ruling and policy-making bodies of the American Legion." (a) Due to the nature and extent of the work involved, it is impossible to specify the titles of statutes and bills; (b) the House and Senate numbers of bills; or (c) the citations of statutes.

C. (3) The legislative commission of the American Legion prepares an article on legislation pending before Congress, which is inserted in the American Legion magazine once a month. The American Legion magazine is distributed to all members of the American Legion. The only publication issued by the American Legion legislative commission is the legislative bulletin, which is issued once a week while Congress is in session. (a) The American Legion magazine is a magazine of interest to veterans, and as above stated, is sent to all members who have paid dues and is part of the consideration for payment of dues. The legislative bulletin is issued to subscribers and also to certain officers of the American Legion who receive same without paying any consideration therefor. Paid subscribers are charged $3 per congressional session. (b) During the past year slightly in excess of 3,000,000 copies of the American Legion magazine were published, and at the present time approximately 4,000 copies of the legislative bulletin are issued. A. Lake Carriers' Association,[5] Cleveland, Ohio.

This letter is being transmitted to you in lieu of statement entitled "Report Pursuant to Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act" for the reason that the formal statement is not suited to this association's comments concerning its expenditures. This letter constitutes the report made by Lake Carriers' Association for the period July 1–September 30, 1950. This association has numerous activities which are carried on in behalf of its member companies, all of whom operate ships on the Great Lakes. Its expenses are defrayed from general assessments made against the companies included in its membership. There is no allocation in an assessment for the expense of any particular activity. As one of its activities, the association reviews legislation pertaining to the Great Lakes maritime industry. In this connection bills are analyzed, reports are made to companies. On occasion, appearances are made on behalf of the association before, and statements and briefs are filed with, legislative committees, and communications are addressed to Members of Congress. In preparing this report, the association has endeavored, without prejudice to its position, stated below, that it is not subject to the regulatory provisions of the Lobbying Act (Public Law 601, 79th Cong.) to allocate fairly the expenses which it incurred in connection with such legislative activity. On the basis of this allocation, the proportionate share of assessments made against any one member company for the expenses involved in such legislative activity did not amount to as much as $500 for the period covered by this report. Further, on the basis of the foregoing allocation, the association's expenses incident to the reviewing of legislation for the period were as as follows: Expense classification and total quarterly expense attributable to legislation—salaries and retainer of persons registered under Lobbying Act, $610; salaries of others participating in preparation of legislative material, $303.70; incidentals, postage, telephone, mimeographing, printing, rent office supplies, stationery, $52.80; total $966.50. These expenditures were paid, as salaries to officers and employees, as retainer to counsel for the association, and for proportion of general office expense. The association is advised and accordingly asserts that, within the meaning of the regulatory provisions of the Lobbying Act, the association (1) does not solicit or receive contributions to any organization or fund for the purpose of aiding in the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress or influencing directly or indirectly the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress; or (2) receive contributions or expend any money for any such purpose; or (3) either directly or indirectly in any manner whatsoever solicit, collect or receive money or anything of value to be used principally to aid in the accomplishment of any such purpose; or (4) engage in any activity which brings the association within the regulatory provisions of the Lobbying Act. This report is made without prejudice to such position.

B. National Association of Electric Companies, 1200 Eighteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C. The National Association of Electric Companies is a trade association whose members are 102 operating electric companies. The preamble of its articles of association describe the functions to be engaged in by the association as follows: "In order to further the interests of the electric utility companies that are members of this association and their investors, employees, and customers; to maintain the integrity and credit of the industry; to present to the public the essential facts about the industry to the end that there may be a better understanding between the utility companies and the public and a better appreciation of utility progress, achievement, and problems; to coordinate regional activities among member companies; to furnish member companies information, reports, and statements concerning various phases of electric utility operations and developments; to further cooperation with all agencies and organizations interested in the supply and purchase of electric light and power; to furnish such agencies and organizations with information, reports, and statements concerning member companies and the electric utility industry; to present the facts to the public concerning the public benefits resulting from the operation of electric utility companies by businessmen under governmental regulations and, generally, to engage in those practices recognized as being legal and proper to furnish said ends, certain electric utility companies do hereby establish a national association which shall be adequately qualified and empowered to act in every lawful way when concert of policy and action would be helpful." (2) To keep the public, including employees, consumers, and investors, informed concerning the accomplishments of the industry, its achievements in serving the public, and the plans of this industry for the future. (3) To furnish, and aid in furnishing, technical information to the instruments of government and to provide a readily available contact between government and the industry. (4) To provide the members of the association with a medium through which they can exchange ideas on problems of mutual concern and interest in order to better serve the public. (5) To act for the member companies in matters of common and national concern.

C. (1) Of indefinite duration.

set forth in previous registrations and reports filed pursuant to title 3 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is to provide its members with a medium through which they can develop and exchange ideas and take appropriate action on problems of mutual concern and interest, including matters involving legislation. The association, therefore, is generally interested in all developments in and of Federal legislation that might affect its members as going electric utilities, including, but not limited to the following bills and statutes and amendments thereto: H. R. 7786, a bill making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes; Internal Revenue Code (53 Stat. 1); TVA Act (48 Stat. 58); Federal Power Act (49 Stat. 803); Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (49 Stat. 1363); reclamation acts (25 Stat. through 45 Stat.); Flood Control Act, 1944 (58 Stat. 887); for specific details concerning the policy position of the National Association of Electric Companies, see the document entitled "Water Resources, Electric Power, and National Policy," prepared in response to an invitation of the Chairman of the President's Commisison on Water Resources Policy, dated March 2, 1950, for a complete statement of the association's position on policy questions. B. Committee for Pipe Line Companies, box 1349, Tulsa, Okla.; unincorporated organization whose function is to act for petroleum pipeline companies that are subject to the act to regulate interstate commerce in regard to matters in which cooperative action is desirable.

C. (1) Indefinite.

C. (2) My general legislative interests are those of the Committee for Pipe Line Companies, which is opposed to proposed legislation as any inimical to the petroleum pipeline industry. Especially the Committee for Pipe Line Companies and myself are opposed to S. 571, a bill to prohibit interstate common-carrier pipelines from transporting commodities in which such carriers have any interest. No action, in the nature of public hearings or otherwise, has been taken in connection with S. 571, consequently I have taken no action in connection with S. 571 or other legislation, which would be covered by the provisions of the Lobbying Act during the period covered by this report.

C. (3) No publications have been issued.

D. (5) I am executive secretary and associate counsel for the Committee for Pipe Line Companies, which was organized to represent and act for interstate petroleum pipeline companies, most of which are subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The form, to which this is attached, states that the committee is opposed to enactment of S. 571, but that no action has been taken by the committee or myself during the period covered by this report in connection with that bill; therefore no service has been rendered by me which falls within the terms of the Lobbying Act, although I have kept the committee informed from time to time of the status of S. 571. The amount of my time devoted to that purpose has been so negligible that I feel justified in reporting that none of my salary, which totaled $3,750 for all my services during the period involved, should be attributed to services covered by the Lobbying Act. (7) $3,750; (8) $3,750; (9) $7,500; (13) see report of Committee for Pipe Line Companies.

B. The National Association of Independent Tire Dealers, Inc., 1302 Eighteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C.; trade association of independent tire dealers.

C. (1) Such legislative interests as I have are expected to continue indefinitely.

C. (2) I have a general legislative interest in statutes or bills which affect the interests of the independent tire dealers. At present I am interested, on behalf of the association, in the smaller defense plants bill (S. 3978 and H. R. 9243) and the antimerger bill (H. R. 2734).

C. (3) The association of which I am general manager neither issues nor causes to be issued any publication solely in connection with legislative interests. The association does publish a weekly printed Dealer News, averaging about eight small-size pages per issue as a part of its regular membership service. The Dealer News discusses subjects of all kinds of interest to members, and in that connection occasionally mentions a statute or bill of Congress of particular concern to independent tire dealers and also in even fewer instances may suggest that members take a position on the matter with their legislative representatives; while it is the association which issues the Dealer News, I as general manager have partial responsibility for its publication, and in some instances write or edit the articles appearing therein; approximately 1,700 copies of each issue of the Dealer News are printed each week by McArdle Printing Co., 2201 M Street NW., Washington, D. D. (5) $6; (7) $6; (8) $135.20; (9) $141.20; (13) no. Consequently, any such activities are extremely minor and only incidental to my other functions; during the third quarter of 1950 I spent only about 1 hour in connection with legislative interests, no matter how broadly that term may be construed; that time was spent attending a conference of managers of small business associations to discuss means of supporting passage of the antimerger bill (H. R. 2734); I have therefore listed a proportionate part of my salary, amounting to $6, under item 5 of paragraph D.

A. National Association of Electric Companies, 1200 Eighteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C. The filing of this report is not to be taken as an admission that the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act is applicable. The National Association of Electric Companies is a trade association whose members are 102 operating electric companies. The preamble of its articles of association describe the functions to be engaged in by the association as follows: "In order to further the interests of the electric utility companies that are members of this association and their investors, employees, and customers; to maintain the integrity and credit of the industry; to present to the public the essential facts about the industry to the end that there may be a better understanding between the utility companies and the public and a better appreciation of utility progress, achievements, and problems; to coordinate regional activities among member companies; to furnish member companies information, reports, and statements concerning various phases of electric utility operations and developments; to further cooperation with all agencies and organizations interested in the supply and purchase of electric light and power; to furnish such agencies and organizations with information, reports, and statements concerning member companies and the electric utility industry; to present the facts to the public concerning the public benefits resulting from the operation of electric utility companies by businessmen under governmental regulations and, generally, to engage in those practices recognized as being legal and proper to further said ends, certain electric utility companies do hereby establish a national association which shall be adequately qualified and empowered to act in every lawful way when concert of policy and action would be helpful." Thus the association functions for the following principal purposes: (1) To keep member companies informed of Washington developments affecting them as operating businesses, including information and analyses of governmental hearings, orders, and regulations, both legislative and administrative; (2) to keep the public, including employees, consumers, and investors, informed concerning the accomplishments of the industry, its achievements in serving the public, and the plans of this industry for the future; (3) to furnish—and aid in furnishing—technical information to the instruments of government and to provide a readily available contact between Government and the industry; (4) to provide the members of the association with a medium through which they can exchange ideas on problems of mutual concern and interest in order to better serve the public; (5) to act for the member companies in matters of common and national concern.

C. (1) The life of the association is of indefinite duration.

C. (2) One of the purposes of the National Association of Electric Companies as set forth in previous registrations and reports filed pursuant to title 3 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is to provide its members with a medium through which they can develop and exchange ideas and take appropriate action on problems of mutual concern and interest, including matters involving legislation. The association, therefore, is generally interested in all developments in and of Federal legislation that might affect its members as going electric utilities, including, but not limited to, the following bills and statutes and amendments thereto: H. A. National Association of Home Builders of the United States, 1028 Connecticut Avenue NW., Washington, D. C.; trade association.

C. (1) Indefinitely.

C. (2) The National Association of Home Builders is a trade association conducting typical trade-association activities, only a small part of which could in any sense be regarded as involving legislative interests. The employees of the association whose principal duties might be regarded as involving legislative interests have registered and regularly report under the Regulation of Lobbying Act. In view of widespread confusion as to appropriate interpretation of the act and our inability to determine the exact meaning and intent of the statute as it applies to trade associations, this report is made under protest. Subject thereto, the association has a general legislative interest in all legislation affecting the home-building industry which, during the quarter covered by this report, included Public Law 774, Defense Production Act of 1950; S. 3746, H. R. 8924, a bill to authorize the creation of private mortgage corporations and to modify the Government's secondary market for FHA-insured and VA-guaranteed residential mortgages; S. 4145, a bill to assist the national defense by authorizing the provision of housing at reactivated military installations, and for other purposes.

C. (3) Although not published in connection with legislative interests, the association publishes a weekly news letter called the Washington Letter and a monthly magazine the Correlator, each of which contains material of interest to the membership, including, as occasion requires, information on legislative matters. During the quarter nine issues of the Washington Letter were published, on the following dates; July 6, 19, and 26; August 4, 14, 23, and 31; September 12 and 22. Approximately 22,000 copies of each issue were printed by Packwood Printing Co., Washington, D. C. With respect to the Correlator, approximately 22,000 copies were run in July, August, and September, by the Darby Printing Co., Washington, D. C. News releases are from time to time sent to the Associated Press, INS, UP, and other national newspaper wire services by the association for publication in subscribed papers and magazines, some of which releases may contain material which might be considered as affecting legislation directly or indirectly. The association has no means of ascertaining a complete list of the publications utilizing such releases. In the course of the operations of the association numerous inquiries are received from representatives of various newspapers, magazines, and other publications for information and material to be used in the preparation of articles concerning housing and, in some cases, pending legislation. We do not understand that the furnishing of such information or material constitutes causing such article to be published within the meaning of the act. Therefore, and because of the physical impossibility of keeping an accurate account of such situations, no detailed report thereof is made. (NOTE.—All of the above information is contained in the reports of Frank W. Cortright, executive vice president, and John M. Dickerman, legislative director, employees of the association.)

D. (1) $3,414.72; (4) $1,833.64; (6) $10,897.03; (7) $16,145.39; (8) $23,922.25; (9) $40,067.64. Total receipts of the association for the quarter, as set forth on the books of the association, were $115,324.19. Sources thereof were: (a) Membership dues; (b) subscription to the Correlator, monthly magazine of the association; (c) sales of space in Builders Buying Guide (advertising section of the Correlator); (d) surplus from 1950 convention and exposition; and (e) various nominal amounts from such miscellaneous activities as sales of Land Planning Book, NAHB Design Service, etc. The stated total constitutes the general funds of the association. Not included are (a) income from the home builders' education fund, no part of which is to be used in connection with legislative interests, and (b) gross receipts in connection with the annual convention and exposition operation of the association, which operation is run separate and apart from the association. The total receipts reported under D (9) from which expenditures are made, or will be made in connection with legislative interests represents the same proportion of receipts of the general fund as the item of estimated expenses made in connection with legislative interests (item E (9)) bears to total general expenses of the association. Item 13: No part of the funds of the association used in connection with legislative interests are derived from contributions of $500 or more. While some contributions from members of the association may have been in the amount of $500 or more, they are not listed in this report since no part of that fund is to be used in connection with legislative interests.

C. (3) The association neither issues nor causes to be issued any publication solely in connection with legislative interests. It publishes a weekly printed Dealer News averaging about eight small-size pages per issue as a part of its regular membership service. The Dealer News discusses subjects of all kinds of interest to members, and in that connection occasionally mentions a statute or bill of Congress of particular concern to independent tire dealers and in even fewer instances suggests that members take a position on the matter with their legislative representatives. Approximately 1,700 copies of each issue of the Dealer News are printed each week by McArdle Printing Co., 2201 M Street NW., Washington, D. C.

A. National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, 60 East Forty-second Street, New York, N. Y.; trade association of mutual savings banks. The National Association of Mutual Savings Banks is a trade organization for the mutual savings banks. The association is supported by the payment of regular dues by the member banks on a schedule basis to carry on all the activities of the association. This statement is filed by the association although it is believed that the law does no require the filing of such a statement, inasmuch as the legislative activities of the association comprise only a small part of its general activities and are not the principal purpose of the association. The association's functions are, among other things, to encourage thrift, to bring about better lending practices on the part of the institutions, to examine and to assist in the rehabilitation of corporations in which the member banks have a substantial financial interest, to encourage generally sound banking practices through committees of the association, to disseminate information helpful to the operation of the savings banks generally, and to participate in a proper way before committees of Congress on legislation in which the mutual savings banks have a legitimate interest. In order, however, that there may be no question about the propriety of failing to file these financial statements, the executive committee of the association has instructed that they be filed. The total dues collected during the period for which this report is made amount to $2,612.50, of which amount $550 was the total amount of dues of $500 or more paid by the members of the association. There is attached a list of banks which have paid dues of $500 or more, and the amount so paid.

C. (1) Legislative interests will continue indefinitely.

C. (2) The general legislative interests consist of any legislation which the mutual savings banks have a legitimate interest in supporting or opposing. Specific legislative interests in period July 1 to September 30, 1950, have been Revenue Act of 1950 (H. R. 8920); FDIC Act (S. 2822); Defense Production Act of 1950 (S. 3936); conversion bill (H. R. 5806).

D. (1) $2,612.50; (7) $2,612.50; (8) $9,885.96; (9) $12,498.46. There follows a list of the member banks which have paid in the period July 1 to September 30, 1950, dues in the amount of $500 or more; $550, Bridgeport Peoples' Savings Bank, Bridgeport, Conn.

E. (2) $3,150; (4) $95.13; (5) $26.55; (6) $360.26; (7) $1,004.27; (9) $4,636.31; (10) $6,485.16; (11) $11,121.47. General counsel is to be paid an annual compensation of $36,000 a year for the calendar year 1950. This covers all legal services rendered to the association. General counsel's office assumes its own office overhead. There are three members of the general counsel's office who regularly do legal work for the association. There is one other who performs infrequently some legal work of the association but not connected with legislative activities. An estimate has been made by the general counsel's office of the proportion of their time allocable to purposes designated in subparagraphs (a) and (b) of section 307 of the act. It is their judgment that approximately 10–15 percent of their legal work has to do with such legislative activities and consequently, to be conservative, they have advised the national association that $5,400, or 15 percent of their total compensation, should be allocated for that purpose for the year 1950 in this return which includes their office overhead attributable to the work. For the preceding calendar quarter there should be included one-fourth of the annual compensation, or $1,350. In addition, $1,800 was paid for professional services to J. Milton Cooper.

The national congress may support or oppose specific statutes and bills which relate to the area of its general legislative interests.

C. (3) The legislative interests of the national congress are reported upon from time to time in National Parent-Teacher, the official magazine of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

D. The National Congress of Parents and Teachers does not receive any contributions for the purposes designated in subparagraphs (a) or (b) of section 307 of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act. Its expenses in connection with its limited legislative activities are paid out of general corporate funds. Such general corporate funds are derived principally from membership fees and from so-called founder's day gifts. During the second quarter of 1950, that is to say, from April 1 to June 30, 1950, the receipts of the national congress were as follows: Membership fees, $49,565.55; life membership fees, $1,150; founder's day gifts, $38,259.01; total, $88,974.56. As will appear below, the national congress expended out of its total receipts the sum of $250 for legislative activities.

E. The legislative activities of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers are carried on through the chairman of the standing committee on legislation and the chairman of the Washington committee on legislation. Ethel G. Brown, of 1134 North Orange Drive, Los Angeles, Calif., is the chairman of the standing committee on legislation; Mrs. Edna Callaghan, of 2032 Belmont Road NW., Washington, D. C., is the chairman of the Washington committee on legislation. During the period from January 1 to March 31, 1950, the total expenditures of the national congress in connection with legislative interests was $250. This sum was paid to the chairman of the standing committee on legislation to defray her out-of-pocket expenses and the out-of-pocket expenses of the chairman of the Washington committee on legislation. As will appear from the separate report filed by the chairman of the standing committee on legislation, some part of the $250 so received by her was disbursed to the chairman of the Washington committee on legislation to defray the latter's out-of-pocket expenses in connection with the legislative activities of the national congress.

A. National Cotton Council of America, post office box 18, Memphis, Tenn.; nonprofit welfare organization to promote the consumption of American grown cotton, cottonseed, and products thereof. The National Cotton Council of America is an organization representing the combined raw cotton industry of the United States, including in its membership cotton producers, ginners, warehousemen, merchants, cotton spinning mills, cottonseed growers, and consumers of raw cotton fiber (other than spinners). Each of these segments of the industry maintains its own organizations or trade associations for the handling of matters in which they have a specific interest. The sole objective of the National Cotton Council is to increase the consumption of cotton, cottonseed, and the products thereof. The National Cotton Council seeks to obtain its objective through programs to increase efficiency in all phases of cotton production, marketing, and processing, through sales promotion; through economic and scientific research; through market analysis; through stimulation of exports, both of raw cotton and processed products; and through legislative activity only when the legislation involved affects the consumption of cotton and its products. Funds for the National Cotton Council are derived through voluntary contributions from the six segments of the industry named in the first paragraphs, above. In the case of each of these six interests, individuals who comprise that interest contribute according to an agreed-upon assessment on each bale of cotton or ton of cottonseed that they produce, handle, or process. All contributions are made to the general fund of the organization and no funds received are earmarked for legislative purposes. Rates of assessment for various segments of the industry are as follows: Producer-ginner, 10 cents per bale (the ginner acts as a collection agency remitting collections to the council. The ginner agrees to pay when the producer is delinquent. This is, however, voluntary); warehousemen, ½-cent per bale; merchants 2 cents per bale on merchandise basis—½-cent per bale on percentage basis; cottonseed crushers, 5 cents per ton on seed crushed; cotton spinning mills, 5 cents per bale; consumer of raw cotton fiber (other than spinners), 5 cents per bale. It will be observed that, since the council does not receive any contributions as such, for legislative purposes, and only makes small expenditures out of its general funds for these purposes, the only way in which the council can report contributions under section 305 of the act is to consider, as contributions to it for legislative purposes, a sum equal to its expenditures for such purposes. The National Cotton Council of America receives no contributions which are earmarked for legislative purposes, and the relatively small expenditures which it makes for such activities is made from its general funds. Its activities in connection with legislative matters are of an incidental nature only and are subordinate to its main purposes. Its expenditures for legislative purposes are chiefly indirect expenditures although, in a few instances, small direct expenses are incurred in this connection. The council maintains its head office in Memphis, Tenn., and it maintains another office in Washington, D. C. The Washington office performs many functions for the council, and only a minor part of the activities of both offices is concerned with legislative matters. Moreover, the Memphis office of the council performs many services for the Washington office, such as mimeographing, stamping, mailing, etc. Therefore, in reporting expenditures for legislative purposes, it is necessary to allocate a proportionate share of total expenditures of the council to legislative expenditures. The expenditures listed on the form include the estimated portion of salary paid to each officer and agent of the council which is chargeable to legislative activities. A number of officers and agents of the council, among their numerous other duties, performs what broadly may be termed legislative activities on behalf of the council. The sum paid to such officer or employee includes a salary for his total activities, plus reimbursable expenditures. Since such officers and employees normally do many things for the council besides incidental work in connection with legislative activities, it is usually necessary to allocate that portion of their salaries and expenses chargeable to legislative activities and that has also been done in computing the following list. The expenditures listed on the form also contain all other direct expenditures of the council for legislative purposes, and likewise represent a proportion of all other expenditures of the council, which in the opinion of the management, reflect its participation in legislative activities during the period covered by this report.

Thus the association functions for the following principal purposes: 1. To keep member companies informed of Washington developments affecting them as operating businesses, including information and analyses of governmental hearings, orders, and regulations, both legislative and administrative. 2. To keep the public, including employees, consumers, and investors, informed concerning the accomplishments of the industry, its achievements in serving the public, and the plans of this industry for the future. 3. To furnish—and aid in furnishing—technical information to the instruments of government and to provide a readily available contact between government and the industry. 4. To provide the members of the association with a medium through which they can exchange ideas on problems of mutual concern and interest in order to better serve the public. 5. To act for the member companies in matters of common and national concern.

C. (1) Of indefinite duration.

C. (2) Registrant is assistant to the president of the National Association of Electric Companies. One of the purposes of this association as set forth in previous registrations and reports filed pursuant to title 3 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is to provide its members with a medium through which they can develop and exchange ideas and take appropriate action on problems of mutual concern and interest, including matters involving legislation. The association, therefore, is generally interested in all developments in and of Federal legislation that might affect its members as going electric utilities, including, but not limited to the following bills and statutes and amendments thereto: H. R. 7786, a bill making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes; Internal Revenue Code (53 Stat. 1); TVA Act (48 Stat. 58); Federal Power Act (49 Stat. 803); Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (49 Stat. 1363); Reclamation Acts (25 Stat. through 45 Stat.); Flood Control Act, 1944 (58 Stat. 887). For specific details concerning the policy position of the National Association of Electric Companies, see the document entitled, "Water Resources, Electric Power and National Policy," prepared in response to an invitation of the Chairman of the President's Commission on Water Resources Policy dated March 2, 1950, for a complete statement of the association's position on policy questions. Copies of this statement have heretofore been filed with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

B. The registrant is employed as an executive secretary by the Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, Inc., 360 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill., which is an organization formed for the mutual assistance of physicians and surgeons in the United States on a dues-paying membership basis, somewhat similar to that of the American Bar Association, and other similar organizations.

C. (1) The Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, Inc., is interested in all matters concerning the practice of medicine and surgery for the self-improvement and protection of its dues-paying members. The members being active practitioners do not have the time to look after these matters personally. The work of the association is educational in character and it issues a monthly newsletter to all members. It becomes necessary at times that committees and Members of the Congress receive educational material concerning pending legislation affecting the practice of medicine and surgery. This registrant, being the executive secretary of the association, is sometimes required to communicate with committees of the Congress and with Members of the Congress, on behalf of the association, concerning matters which affect members of the association. Not more than 10 percent of the time and energy of the registrant is devoted to such educational work with the committees of the Congress. The association does not concern itself with any proposed legislation except that affecting physicians and surgeons in the practice of their profession and registrant's activities are limited to making known to committees and Members of the Congress the interests of the member physicians and surgeons. The monthly news letter is a four-page printed communication issued by the association itself and in large part composed by the registrant along with the other duties of his position.

A. Don Petty, 1771 N Street NW., Washington, D. C.; attorney.

B. National Association of Broadcasters, 1771 N Street NW., Washington, D. C.; registrant's client, a national trade association.

C. (1) Registrant is interested in any legislation—local, State, Federal, or international—which affects the broadcasting industry. Registrant will have a legislative interest as long as he represents this client.

C. (2) As stated immediately above, registrant is interested in any legislation affecting his client, and during the last quarter particularly in H. R. 8920 (excise tax on television receivers); S. 1973 (McFarland bill) and H. R. 4241; Sadowski bill (H. R. 6949); H. R. 7310 (Sheppard bill); and H. R. 8726 (exempting from duty sound recordings for news broadcasts) (Public Law 773).

C. (3) (a) S. 1973 and H. R. 4241; 25 letters to association's board of directors; August 11, 1950. (b) H. R. 8920; 36 wires to television stations, August 23, 1950; letter to Senate Finance Committee, August 4, 1950.

D and E. Registrant is of the opinion that the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act of 1946 is not applicable to him. Any activities from time to time of registrant relating to the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the United States are incidental to his activities as attorney for the association. However, he registers under the act in order that he may carry on his duties as attorney without question being raised by any person as to the propriety of his performing any act respecting Federal legislation, incidental to his other activities though it may be. The registrant does not directly or indirectly solicit, collect, or receive any money or other thing of value to aid, nor is the principal purpose of registrant to aid, in the accomplishment of the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the United States, or to influence, directly or indirectly, the passage or defeat of any such legislation. In view of the foregoing explanation, it is impossible to answer D and E. During the past quarter registrant has received the sum of $3,750 as a retainer fee from said association and the sum of $62.16 for business expenses in connection with his numerous activities in all fields of law relating to this particular client, the National Association of Broadcasters. The approximate cost of activities under C (3) (a) was $3; under C (3) (b), $134.

A. Frank M. Porter, 50 West Fiftieth Street, New York, N. Y.; president, national trade organization.

B. American Petroleum Institute, 50 West Fiftieth Street, New York, N. Y.; national trade organization.

C. The following statement included in the preliminary report of the registrant, filed on May 16, 1950, is made a part hereof: "The registrant is president of the American Petroleum Institute (the institute), a national trade association of the petroleum industry. He was elected on April 3, 1950, and assumed office on May 1, 1950. The registrant has been advised by counsel and believes that he is not subject to the provisions of the Federal Regulation of the Lobbying Act (the act), and that he is not required to register or file any reports under the act. He files this registration because the Department of Justice has expressed the view that his predecessor was subject to the act and he anticipates that his duties will be similar to those of his predecessor. By filing this registration, however, the registrant does not admit that he is subject to the provisions of the act or that he is required to register. The registrant has not engaged himself for pay for the purpose of attempting to influence the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the United States. He is elected to serve until the next annual meeting of the institute and receive an annual salary to perform all of the duties of his office as chief executive and administrative officer of the institute. To the extent that he may deal with Federal legislative matters, he will do so only as an incident to the performance of his over-all responsibilities as directing head of the institute. Since the registrant's salary is received to perform all the duties of his office, it is his view that he is not paid any sum for the purpose of attempting to influence Federal legislation. His annual salary is $60,000, payable semimonthly. Since there is no way he can determine in advance the proportion of his business time, if any, which he may devote to Federal legislation, it is not possible at this time for him to apportion such salary upon the basis of time so expended. Based upon the experience of his predecessor, however, the registrant anticipates that only a very small portion of his time will be spent on Federal legislative matters. For the purposes of filing subsequent periodic reports, the registrant intends to apportion a part of his annual salary to Federal legislative purposes on the basis of his best estimate of the proportion of time actually spent by him during the period on matters relating to Federal legislation. The making of any such apportionment in subsequent reports is not to be construed as an admission that the registrant is employed for the purpose of influencing Federal legislation. No fixed sum is allowed the registrant by the institute for expenses incurred in the performance of his duties. His actual expenses relating to Federal legislation, if any, will be set forth in subsequent periodic reports. The expenses for which the registrant expects to be reimbursed in the event he incurs any such expenses are of character similar to those customarily incurred by the managing head of an organization in the discharge of his official duties. In general, such expenses would cover travel, sustenance, and communication. To the extent that the registrant does concern himself with legislative matters in the future, his interest will be in legislation affecting the petroleum industry and he may become interested in such legislation at any time during his tenure of office. The specific matters with which he may become concerned cannot be predicted now but may include the specific matters set forth in the report of the institute under the act for the first quarter of 1950." For the period July 1 to and including September 30, 1950, the end of the quarter covered by this report, the registrant did not engage in any activity relating to the influencing of Federal legislation and did not expend any money for such purpose. Accordingly, the registrant does not apportion any part of his annual salary to Federal legislative purposes for this quarter. In answer to items D and E, therefore, he states that he did not have any receipts in connection with Federal legislative interests and did not make any expenditures in connection with such interests.

[4] Filed for second quarter, 1950.

A. P. L. Smith, 1200 Eighteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C.; registrant is the president of the National Association of Electric Companies, a trade organization whose members are 102 operating companies. P. L. Smith, president of the National Association of Electric Companies, is filing this form for the information of the Congress of the United States under title 3 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 but questions whether and to what extent that act applies to him. This form has been prepared without the benefit of official interpretations of that statute. The amount stated in item (D) of the form is the total salary registrant receives as president of the association in the performance of all his duties as they arise in carrying out the purposes and activities of the association.

B. National Association of Electric Companies, 1200 Eighteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C. The National Association of Electric Companies is a trade association whose members are 102 operating electric companies. The preamble of its articles of association describe the functions to be engaged in by the association as follows: "In order to further the interests of the electric utility companies that are members of this association and their investors, employees, and customers; to maintain the integrity and credit of the industry; to present to the public the essential facts about the industry to the end that there may be a better understanding between the utility companies and the public and a better appreciation of utility progress, achievements, and problems; to coordinate regional activities among member companies; to furnish member companies information, reports, and statements concerning various phases of electric utility operations and developments; to further cooperation with all agencies and organizations interested in the supply and purchase of electric light and power; to furnish such agencies and organizations with information, reports, and statements concerning member companies and the electric utility industry; to present the facts to the public concerning the public benefits resulting from the operation of electric utility companies by businessmen under governmental regulations and, generally, to engage in those practices recognized as being legal and proper to further said ends, certain electric utility companies do hereby establish a national association which shall be adequately qualified and empowered to act in every lawful way when concert of policy and action would be helpful." Thus the association functions for the following principal purposes: (1) To keep member companies informed of Washington developments affecting them as operating businesses, including information and analyses of governmental hearings, orders, and regulations, both legislative and administrative; (2) to keep the public, including employees, consumers, and investors, informed concerning the accomplishments of the industry, its achievements in serving the public, and the plans of this industry for the future; (3) to furnish, and aid in furnishing, technical information to the instruments of government and to provide a readily available contact between government and the industry; (4) to provide the members of the association with a medium through which they can exchange ideas on problems of mutual concern and interest in order to better serve the public; (5) to act for the member companies in matters of common and national concern.

C. (1) Of indefinite duration.

C. (2) Registrant is president of the National Association of Electric Companies.

One of the purposes of this association as set forth in previous registrations and reports filed pursuant to title 3 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is to provide its members with a medium through which they can develop and exchange ideas and take appropriate action on problems of mutual concern and interest, including matters involving legislation. The association, therefore, is generally interested in all developments in and of Federal legislation that might affect its members as going electric utilities, including, but not limited to the following bills and statutes and amendments thereto: H. R. 7786, a bill making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes; Internal Revenue Code (53 Stat. 1); TVA Act (48 Stat. 58); Federal Power Act (49 Stat. 803); Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (49 Stat. 1363); reclamation acts (25 Stat. through 45 Stat.); Flood Control Act of 1944 (58 Stat. 887). For specific details concerning the policy position of the National Association of Electric Companies, see the document entitled "Water Resources, Electric Power, and National Policy," prepared in response to an invitation of the Chairman of the President's Commission on Water Resources Policy, dated March 2, 1950, for a complete statement of the association's position on policy questions. Copies of this statement have heretofore been filed with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

My entire salary is used for my own personal needs. I have solicited no funds, made no loans, or had any other financial or property transactions even remotely connected with any legislative activity. As part of my duties I made inquiries, during the third quarter, concerning the status of legislation, legislative programs of congressional committees, and on one occasion transmitted the views of the Grain and Feed Dealers National Association on a particular provision of the defense production bill to the chairmen, respectively, of the Banking and Currency Committees of the House and Senate, and to certain members of the House and Senate.

nue Code. A reduction of this tax was approved by the House of Representatives when it passed H. R. 8920. Such excise tax reductions, however, were subsequently stricken by the Senate Finance Committee for the following reasons (S. Rept. 2375, 81st Cong., 2d sess.): "Military action in Korea coupled with substantial increases in defense and related expenditures has made it necessary to convert the excise tax reduction bill passed by the House in June of this year into a bill to raise revenues." The fact of this final action was anticipated by the registrant prior to the close of the preceding quarter. Further legislative activity in connection with said proposed excise tax relief was therefore made unnecessary. During the quarter herein reported the registrant engaged in no legislative activity and collected no funds nor expended any moneys in pursuance of any Federal legislation.

R. 9249, to amend section 402 (a) of the National Housing Act to change the name of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. United States Savings and Loan League is advised by counsel, and believes, that it is not subject to the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act for the reason that its principal purpose is not to influence legislation and it does not raise money principally to influence legislation. However, it has discovered that the Attorney General of the United States has taken the position that it is subject to the act. It has never at any time had any reason not to comply with the act if it is subject to it, and it has never at any time had any facts which it desired to conceal if it is required by law to report the same. Therefore, in view of the foregoing, and without admitting that it is subject to the act, this report is filed.

A. Stephen M. Walter, 1200 Eighteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C.; registrant is an employee of the National Association of Electric Companies, a trade association whose members are 102 operating electric companies. Mr. Stephen M. Walter, an employee of the National Association of Electric Companies, is filing this form for the information of the Congress of the United States under title 3 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 but questions whether and to what extent that act applies to him. This form has been prepared without the benefit of official interpretations of that statute.

B. National Association of Electric Companies, 1200 Eighteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C. The National Association of Electric Companies is a trade association whose members are 102 operating electric companies. The preamble of its articles of association describe the functions to be engaged in by the association as follows: "In order to further the interests of the electric utility companies that are members of this association and their investors, employees, and customers; to maintain the integrity and credit of the industry; to present to the public the essential facts about the industry to the end that there may be a better understanding between the utility companies and the public and a better appreciation of utility progress, achievements and problems; to coordinate regional activities among member companies; to furnish member companies information, reports, and statements concerning various phases of electric utility operations and developments; to further cooperation with all agencies and organizations interested in the supply and purchase of electric light and power; to furnish such agencies and organizations with information, reports, and statements concerning member companies and the electric utility industry; to present the facts to the public concerning the public benefits resulting from the operation of electric utility companies by businessmen under governmental regulations and, generally, to engage in those practices recognized as being legal and proper to further said ends, certain electric utility companies do hereby establish a national association which shall be adequately qualified and empowered to act in every lawful way when concert of policy and action would be helpful." Thus the association functions for the following principal purposes: (1) To keep member companies informed of Washington developments affecting them as operating businesses, including information, and analyses of governmental hearings, orders, and regulations, both legislative and administrative; (2) to keep the public, including employees, consumers, and investors, informed concerning the accomplishments of the industry, its achievements in serving the public, and the plans of this industry for the future; (3) to furnish, and aid in furnishing, technical information to the instruments of government and to provide a readily available contact between government and the industry; (4) to provide the members of the association with a medium through which they can exchange ideas on problems of mutual concern and interest in order to better serve the public; (5) to act for the member companies in matters of common and national concern.

C. (1) Of indefinite duration.

C. (2) Registrant is employed by the National Association of Electric Companies. One of the purposes of this association as set forth in previous registrations and reports filed pursuant to title 3 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is to provide its members with a medium through which they can develop and exchange ideas and take appropriate action on problems of mutual concern and interest, including matters involving legislation. The association, therefore, is generally interested in all developments in and of Federal legislation that might affect its members as going electric utilities, including, but not limited, to the following bills and statutes and amendments thereto: H. R. 7786, a bill making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes; Internal Revenue Code (53 Stat. 1); TVA Act (48 Stat. 58); Federal Power Act (49 Stat. 803); Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (49 Stat. 1363); reclamation acts (25 Stat. through 45 Stat); Flood Control Act, 1944 (58 Stat. 887). For specific details concerning the policy position of the National Association of Electric Companies, see the document entitled "Water Resources, Electric Power, and National Policy," prepared in response to an invitation of the Chairman of the President's Commission on Water Resources Policy, dated March 2, 1950, for a complete statement of the association's position on policy questions. Copies of this statement have heretofore been filed with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

C. (1) Probably as long as this individual remains in this capacity with the indicated employer.

C. (2) Any legislation which would specifically have an effect upon the production, consumption, import, export, or taxation of any animal or vegetable fat or oil as well as all general legislation affecting business—particularly small business.

C. (3) As secretary-treasurer and manager of the Washington national headquarters office of the National Renderers Association, part of the duties of the affiant consist in preparing and supervising the issue of periodical informational bulletins to approximately 275 members of the association. Such releases frequently contain reports on the status of legislation in the fields specified in C (2). In addition, the affiant, by virtue of being the chief corresponding officer of the group, occasionally is required to convey, to various congressional sources, the views of the National Renderers Association with respect to the type of legislation described in C (2). However, it is estimated that not more than 20 percent of the time and duties of this affiant are concerned with such procedure or have any relation whatsoever to congressional legislation.

C. (4) The affiant receives a fixed, monthly salary for his services as secretary-treasurer and Washington headquarters office manager of the association. In addition, the affiant receives monthly reimbursement for any cash advance made in connection with association activities, such as postage for the informational bulletins sent out from Washington, local taxi fares in connection with matters pertaining to the association, limited entertainment expenses, etc., and reimbursement for out-of-town travel when on association business. As set forth in (3) above, it is estimated that not more than 20 percent of the sums so received by the affiant could be shown to have any relation whatsoever to legislative matters. The nature and approximate amount of such expenditures is expected to continue along the same lines as long as the affiant continues to be employed in this particular capacity or until such time as the objectives of the employer are altered or there is a redefining of the duties of this particular job. For expenditure amounts involved, see the registration statement of the National Renderers Association.

SENATE

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1950

(Legislative day of Monday, November 27, 1950)

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Spirit, who dost overarch our transiency with Thine everlastingness and dost undergird our weakness with Thy strength; in a shaken world, amid the tensions of these terrific days, we seek in Thy presence a saving experience of inner quiet and certainty. As we come, sobered by great issues and faced by great decisions, we have the awful consciousness that we are being died for in a bitter, frozen, alien land.

Give us that penitence for our own sins, our own betrayals of our threatened freedom, that shall enable us to put on the whole armor of God as we fight against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. In this anxious day may we find the calming assurance that—

"Conquer, we must, for our cause it is just,
While this is our motto, in God is our trust."

We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution of the House of Delegates of the State of Maryland; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"House Resolution 5

"Resolution informing the Congress of the United States that the people and government of the State of Maryland are ready and willing to pledge their full support to any legislation that the Congress may enact for the mobilization of the manpower, agriculture, industries, and finances of the Congress to meet any and all aggression against the freedom and liberties of any country

"Whereas the invasion of South Korea by Communist North Korea has informed the people throughout the world that unless such aggression is repelled, it will only be a question of time until aggression will appear in other parts of the world; and

"Whereas such continued aggression will result in another disastrous world war in which the liberties and freedom of all peoples will not only be endangered but may be absolutely destroyed; and

"Whereas it is of the highest importance that the American people devote all of their energies and efforts toward the complete mobilization of the industries, agriculture, and finances as well as of the manpower of the country, if the Congress so enact, in order to be prepared to resist and overcome all aggression: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Delegates of Maryland, That the Congress of the United States be informed that the people and government of the State of Maryland hereby pledge their full and complete support for any legislation which the Congress may enact for the complete mobilization of the manpower, industries and finances of the country in order to protect and defend the freedom and liberties of all people by resisting aggression wherever and whenever it may occur; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state of Maryland be and she is hereby requested to send under the great seal of the State of Maryland copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, and to each Representative of the State in the Congress of the United States from the State of Maryland."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"Senate Joint Resolution 4

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing Congress and the Department of Agriculture to have research and investigation on beet leafhoppers in California undertaken by the United States Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine

"Whereas the United States Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, from 1927 to 1943, conducted research and investigational work on the life history, migrations, habits, and destructive proclivities of the beet leafhopper, a pest of important susceptible crops grown in California through transmission thereto of curly top disease virus; and

"Whereas the finding from such activities proved helpful to other official agencies and to private groups in their efforts to develop control procedures against said beet leafhoppers; and

"Whereas there have been recurrences of crop damage from said virus-caused malady in recent years, thereby making it increasingly important that additional data be supplied to supplement that heretofore developed as an aid to the beet leafhopper suppression program by official State and county agricultural agencies: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture be respectfully memorialized to again have research and investigations on beet leafhoppers in California undertaken by the United States Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine either as a special project or as a part of similar work now being carried on in other Western States to which the California project was transferred in 1943; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the Senate is directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture, to the head of the United States Agricultural Research Administration, and to the Chief of the United States Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Armed Services:

"Senate Joint Resolution 1

"Joint resolution relative to the United States Marines

"Whereas the United States Marine Corps was originally organized on November 10, 1775, when the Second Continental Congress of the United States authorized two battalions of marines for the new Navy; and

"Whereas since the first historic landing of the Marines on the Bahamas during the Revolutionary War the Marine Corps has devoted 175 years of faithful and courageous service to the defense of the United States; and

"Whereas during World War I the United States Marine Corps valiantly distinguished itself serving with the Army during the battles of Belleau Wood, Aisne-Marne, St. Mihiel, Blanc Mont, and Meuse-Argonne; and

"Whereas this generation should never forget the role of the United States Marines in World War II, nor could it forget the United States Marines' part in the courageous defenses of Wake Island, Midway, and Corregidor, nor the heroism of the United States Marines in the battles of Guadalcanal, Bougainville, Tarawa, Saipan, Guam, Tinian, Iwo Jima, and Okinawa, to name but a few; and

"Whereas the United States Marines throughout their history have shown excellent coordination in using their tremendous striking power for the maximum effects, and have shown excellent cooperation with the Army and Navy forces in keeping wars on foreign shores and away from our homeland; and

"Whereas the United States Marines at present are again demonstrating to the world their bravery and power in their attacks on Inchon and Seoul in South Korea; and

"Whereas the multitude of American boys and young men, among them many thousands of Californians, who have volunteered and are serving, and who are now volunteering for service with the United States Marines are to be highly commended on joining the Marines, our first line of defense, and the outfit first to face the enemy: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California hereby highly and heartily commends the United States Marines for their courage, bravery, coordination, cooperation with other branches of the Armed Forces, and, in short, the fulfillment of their motto 'semper fidelis'; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the Senate is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 1

"Joint resolution relating to memorializing the President and Congress of the United States in respect to residential construction

"Whereas there is still a shortage of homes for veterans within this country; and

"Whereas this shortage is particularly noticeable in California because of the large veteran population in the State; and

"Whereas the Congress has recently indicated as a part of the Defense Production Act of 1950 that veterans credit preferences, provided by the Servicemen's Readjustment Act and the laws creating a 100-percent Government secondary market for loans made under it, should and must be preserved: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to channel the majority of residential construction into the home loan program of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, by a zealous regard for the preferences accorded veterans by this act and the Defense Production Act of 1950; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Senate Joint Resolution 5

"Joint resolution relative to requesting the United States State Department to make available to the California Senate investigating committee on education certain information relating to Californians traveling to and from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

"Whereas there are two major powers in the world today, the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and

"Whereas the Soviet Government is currently engaged in world-wide conspiracy to incite civil war in the free nations and has a powerful secret conspiracy organized and active in this country which presents a clear and present danger to our national safety; and

"Whereas the Soviet conspiracy communications operate by means of couriers between this country and Moscow; and

"Whereas the senate investigating committee on education in pursuing its inquiry into Communist propaganda has requested information from the United States State Department about the names of Californians obtaining passports to travel to and from the Soviet; and

"Whereas it is evident that contacts between the Communist organization in California and the Soviet Government are being maintained by couriers who travel on passports; and

"Whereas it would be very helpful to the senate interim committee on education to identify these important agents of the Soviet engaged in conspiracy to overthrow our Govment, both State and National: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California hereby urgently requests the Representatives in Congress from the State of California to do everything in their power to make available to the senate interim committee on education the information requested about Californians traveling to and from the Soviet; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 4

"Joint resolution relating to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States in respect to the welfare and recreational needs of servicemen training in California

"Whereas there will soon be training in California the largest peacetime Armed Force in history; and

"Whereas many of the bases at which training is taking place are located near smaller communities; and

"Whereas the State of California and these communities desire to provide welfare and recreational services within their means; and

"Whereas the means of many of these local communities are limited to the extent that it is beyond their capacity to provide adequate welfare and recreational services to both the civilian population and the Armed Forces; and

"Whereas adequate welfare and recreational facilities of such communities are vital to the morale of the Armed Forces: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to recognize the need of adequate recreational facilities and programs in these communities by appropriating Federal grants-in-aid for apportionment by the State to communities adjacent to military bases to meet these needs; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the National Security Resources Board, the President's Committee on Religion and Welfare of the Armed Forces, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"Senate Joint Resolution 3

"Joint resolution relative to the priority of schools under Federal allocation program affecting construction

"Whereas the population of California has increased 52 percent during the 10-year period from 1940 to 1950; and

"Whereas there are nearly as many children of preschool age now in California as there are children in the first nine grades; and

"Whereas public-school enrollment in California will increase 1,000,000 during the next 10 years according to conservative estimates; and

"Whereas California urgently needs additional classrooms and must replace additional rooms in buildings now inadequate; and

"Whereas the people of California have heavily bonded themselves to meet the most emergent needs of their children, and now find that there is a danger material allocations may interfere with this urgent program of school construction: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to consider in any allocations program affecting construction that schools have an importance second only to defense needs, and that our educational program must be carried on for the sake of this freedom and way of life we cherish and defend; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

A resolution of the Senate of the State of California; to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"Senate Resolution 13

"Resolution relative to commending the Federal Bureau of Investigation

"Whereas thoughtful Americans are convinced that the present time is one fraught with great national peril and a time in which American institutions and American freedom are in jeopardy; and

"Whereas more alarming than the enmity of people of foreign lands who have been victimized by vicious propaganda is the disloyalty of people within our own ranks who have succumbed to the same propaganda, and the unbridled activity of enemy agents in our midst; and

"Whereas it is a matter of great comfort and assurance to the American people to know that various organizations charged with the investigation of un-American activities, in particular the Federal Bureau of Investigation, have kept close watch upon the activities of subversive groups and individuals and are rendering the American people a service of inestimable value in defending us from the vicious activities of the traitor and the spy: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of California, That we commend the Federal Bureau of Investigation and its Director, J. Edgar Hoover, for the excellent work that has been accomplished and for the diligence, courage, and foresight which have been demonstrated; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary be and he is hereby directed to forward a copy of this resolution to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 9

"Concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States of America to pass legislation to extend the Federal reclamation program to cover the Territory of Hawaii and its reclamation and irrigation needs

"Whereas there exists a very definite need in the Territory of Hawaii for more local production of our own foodstuffs in order to achieve a greater degree of self-sufficiency; and

"Whereas the Territory's lack of mineral or other extractive natural resources, and the physical limitations of its industrially productive capacity make adjustments to economic change more difficult than in other communities of more diversified economic activity; and

"Whereas Hawaii's terrain, climate, resources, and population are best suited to agricultural activities and a definite need exists for more diversified truck farmers in order to supply the basic needs of the Territory which must now be imported almost wholly from the mainland; and

"Whereas there is also great need for a stabilized agricultural industry which can capitalize on our year-round good climate and which is not dependent on a national or world market; and

"Whereas sizable areas of territorial land exist which are either idle or low-usage tracts due to the lack of water and which could be used with adequate irrigation to assimilate a good portion of the present unemployed, providing them with a gainful occupation and developing a strong basic industry of truck farming to help stabilize the over-all economy of Hawaii; and

"Whereas on virtually every island goodly quantities of water run into the ocean unused which might be diverted through irrigation projects to the areas needing only the water to convert the land into top-producing farmlands; and

"Whereas the establishing of such irrigation projects and the building of a substantial truck-farming industry in Hawaii would not only protect the islands against serious food and stock feed shortages due to interruption of shipping facilities through either wars, strikes, or other emergencies, but also make possible a produce export business to certain parts of the mainland United States during the winter months, as well as opening the possibility of developing some small hydroelectric power projects; and

"Whereas this program is a long-range answer to the need for the relocation and reestablishment of people on the land who left it during the recent war and in so doing also answers a long-standing need for home and land ownership for more people in Hawaii; and

"Whereas Congress has authorized the Federal Reclamation Bureau to make surveys of reclamation needs and potentials in various sections of the United States; and

"Whereas it has been pointed out to certain members of this legislature who conferred with the Department of Interior authorities and Congressmen during the Senate statehood hearing in May of this year that Hawaii could feasibly be included in the Federal reclamation program contingent only upon approval of such inclusion through the legislative process; and

"Whereas there exists among many Member of Congress and in the Interior Department an expressed and recorded sympathy for such projects: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the senate of the twenty-fifth legislature (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be and is hereby respectfully requested to introduce legislation and favorably consider at their earliest convenience such legislation which will extend to the Territory of Hawaii the benefits and privileges of the Federal reclamation program which has been implemented to develop the previously arid and nonproductive areas of the western United States into higly useable and productive lands today; and be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of this concurrent resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii, and the Secretary of the Interior."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; ordered to lie on the table:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 6

"Concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to grant statehood to Hawaii

"Whereas the people of the Territory of Hawaii did establish a constitutional convention for the drafting of a constitution for the proposed State of Hawaii; and

"Whereas the Twenty-fifth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii has been and is now convened in special session to provide for the submission to the people of the Territory of Hawaii the proposed constitution drafted in the aforesaid convention; and

"Whereas the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii has, in said special session, approved the constitution in its entirety as it was drafted by the constitutional convention and has now enacted the necessary legislation to permit the people of Hawaii to express, at the general election to be held on November 7, 1950, their ratification or rejection of this constitution; and

"Whereas it is clearly indicated that the people of the Territory of Hawaii will overwhelmingly endorse and approve the adoption of the constitution drafted and submitted to them, and thereby establish beyond any reasonable or possible doubt the profound desire of the people of the Territory to be granted statehood; and

"Whereas the Congress of the United States has repeatedly considered the question of granting statehood to the Territory of Hawaii, and the Eighty-first Congress of the United States now has before it the question of Hawaiian statehood; and

"Whereas Hawaii has abundantly demonstrated its capacity and complete qualifications for admission to the sisterhood of sovereign States that comprise the great United States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-fifth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, in special session assembled (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be and it is hereby requested to grant statehood to the Territory of Hawaii, by passage of H. R. 49 now pending before the Congress of the United States with such amendments thereto as may be appropriate for the immediate admission of Hawaii as a State; and be it further

"Resolved, That duly certified copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Delegate to the Congress from Hawaii."

A resolution of the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands; to the Committee on Finance:

"Resolution of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands of the United States, first session 1950, expressing the gratitude and appreciation of the people of the Virgin Islands to the President and Congress of the United States for the inclusion of said islands in the social-security program embodied in public law 734, Eighty-first Congress

"Whereas for years the Virgin Islands of the United States have been consistently left out of the benefits and of the social legislation adopted by the Congress of the United States and made applicable to the States of the Union and the Territories and island possessions of the United States; and

"Whereas the Virgin Islands, due to this consistent omission and the scarcity of natural resources, have been in great need of a social security program far beyond the ability of its constituent municipalities to afford; and

"Whereas during the last few years, title V of the Federal Social Security Act adopted by the Congress of the United States on August 14, 1935, including maternal and child health service, crippled children services, and child welfare services, was made applicable to the Virgin Islands, but was clearly inadequate to meet the wide-spread need for social-security benefits existing in the islands; and

"Whereas when Public Law 734, Eighty-first Congress, was before the Congress for hearings, a subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee of the United States House of Representatives, under the capable chairmanship of Representative SYDNEY CAMP, visited the Virgin Islands, held hearings, and made a report in which the committee highly recommended the application of the expanded social-security program embodied in Public Law 734, Eighty-first Congress to the Virgin Islands; and

"Whereas in conformity with this recommendation the Congress of the United States adopted Public Law 734, Eighty-first Congress including the Virgin Islands of the United States as one of the areas to benefit from the following titles thereof:

"Title I. Old-age assistance;

"Title II. Old-age and survivors insurance;

"Title IV. Aid to dependent children;

"Title X. Aid to the blind; and

"Title XIV. Aid to the permanently and totally disabled; and

"Whereas the people of the Virgin Islands are deeply grateful and appreciative to the President and Congress of the United States for having included them in the much needed social-security program embraced in this act and desire, through their duly elected representatives in the legislative assembly, to so express themselves to the Federal Government: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, and it is hereby resolved by the legislative assembly in session assembled, That the people of the Virgin Islands, through the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands, hereby express to the President and Congress of the United States their heartfelt gratitude and appreciation for including the Virgin Islands in the aforementioned titles of Public Law 734, Eighty-first Congress; and be it further

"Resolved, and it is hereby further resolved, That this resolution be engrossed and forwarded to the President of the United States and the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States; and that copies thereof be transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior and the Governor of the Virgin Islands."

Two resolutions of the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Resolution of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands of the United States, first session, 1950, petitioning the Eighty-first Congress of the United States to amend the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands to provide for a Resident Commissioner from the Virgin Islands

"Whereas on April 1, 1949, the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2988) to provide for a Resident Commissioner from the Virgin Islands, recommended that the bill be favorably acted upon; and

"Whereas although the Congress of the United States recognizes the justice and value of affording representation to its Territories and possessions through locally elected delegates, it has failed to extend this privilege to the Virgin Islands; and

"Whereas the Congress of the United States is aware that the people of the Virgin Islands are literate and politically alert to assume a greater degree of self-government; and

"Whereas the people of the Virgin Islands have repeatedly petitioned the Congress of the United States to permit them to be represented in Congress: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, and it is hereby resolved by the legislative assembly in session assembled, That the Congress of the United States be and it is hereby petitioned, in consideration of the foregoing, to amend the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands to provide for a Resident Commissioner from the Virgin Islands; and be it further

"Resolved, and it is hereby further resolved, That this resolution be forwarded to the Congress of the United States and that copies thereof be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, the Director of the Division of Territories and Island Possessions, and the Governor of the Virgin Islands, and that same be widely publicized."

"Resolution of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands of the United States, first session 1950, petitioning the Eighty-first Congress of the United States to authorize payment into the treasury of the Virgin Islands of all taxes collected under the internal revenue laws of the United States on articles produced in the Virgin Islands and transported to the United States of America

"Whereas all liquors and articles produced in the Virgin Islands and transported to the United States are subject to the Federal internal revenue tax provided in the United States Code; and

"Whereas while the island of Puerto Rico and other Territories of the United States are authorized to receive the taxes collected in the United States on articles produced in those islands, the Virgin Islands, which are in dire need, do not enjoy this privilege; and

"Whereas if the taxes collected in the United States on articles produced in the Virgin Islands were returned it would greatly strengthen the economic structure of the islands and would make them less dependent on deficit appropriations or other aid from the United States; and

"Whereas the Virgin Islands are in a financial plight, and if we are properly to continue to maintain our public services, departments, and democratic institutions, this situation must be rectified immediately: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved and it is hereby resolved, by the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands in session assembled, That the Congress of the United States be and is hereby petitioned to enact legislation to authorize payment into the treasury of the Virgin Islands of all taxes collected on liquors and articles produced in the Virgin Islands and transported to the United States; and be it further

"Resolved and it is hereby further resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, President of the Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives, majority leaders of the Senate and House, chairman of the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, chairman of the House Public Lands Committee, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, the Department of the Interior, the Director of the Division of Territories and island possessions, the Governor of the Virgin Islands, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, chairman of the Republican National Committee, and the chairman of the Insular Democratic Committee of the Virgin Islands."

INCIDENT IN GEN. GEORGE C. MARSHALL'S FOOTBALL CAREER

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, pleasant memories often lighten heavy loads.

I wish to read a brief item from the Rockbridge County News of 50 years ago concerning the college days of a man now carrying a heavy load. The Rockbridge County News is published in my home town of Lexington, and is one of our best edited weekly newspapers. In its column entitled "Out of the Past," is this comment on a football game between VMI and Washington and Lee University:

For the second time this season the Cadets and Students met Saturday on the gridiron. The final score was 41 to 0 in favor of the Cadets. George Marshall's run of 50 yards for a touchdown for the Cadets was the feature of the game.

Mr. President, if we reach the goal of peace George Marshall may have to make another 50-yard run. I am glad that he is carrying the ball for our team.

THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, there has been called to my attention today a very fine speech by the Honorable Lionel Chevrier, Minister of Transport of Canada. The subject of his speech was the Nation's business. The speech was delivered over the CBC network.

Mr. Chevrier's speech relates to the need for construction of the St. Lawrence waterway. I wish to read two paragraphs from his speech. He says, among other things:

The newly discovered iron ore fields of northern Quebec and Labrador can be most speedily exploited only when the St. Lawrence seaway is completed. For years the backbone of the steel industry in the United States has been high-grade iron ores of the Mesabi Range to the south of Lake Superior. The high-grade ores from these fields are being rapidly depleted and that factor accounts for the interest in the fields of Quebec and Labrador, where upward of 400,000,000 tons of high-grade ores have been amply proven.

In conclusion, Mr. Chevrier says:

But let there be no mistake about it. This is a power and navigation scheme, not a power scheme alone as some interests would seem to indicate. If it is impossible to obtain the joint development referred to in the 1941 agreement, then consideration must be given—as indeed it already has—to an all-Canadian route.

Mr. President, today the news from Korea is probably the most critical we have heard since the end of the last war. Joe Stalin's hand is now exposed. Undoubtedly he has given the order which has brought 200,000 Chinese into the conflict, and other troops are moving up. What the next move will be, we do not know.

However, any of us who have eyes to see with and ears to hear with know that all channels—railroads, highways, air lanes, waterways—must be opened up to meet the situation. Whether it be the challenges of peace or the challenges of war. I trust that after the first of the year a bill relating to the St. Lawrence waterway will be introduced, and that at long last we can have it receive the favorable consideration of the Senate.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire speech be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Tonight I would like to speak to you on a subject which in recent months has again come to the fore and which should be of interest to all Canadians—the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway.

The deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway is by no means a new question. It is one that has been agitating public opinion for at least a century. During the last half-century it has been the subject of negotiations between Canada and the United States. These negotiations culminated in the signing of an agreement between the two countries in 1941.

The project must be envisaged from two angles—that of power and that of navigation.

WHAT IS THE GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY?

It is a 2,000-mile channel, 27 feet in depth, joining the Atlantic Ocean to the heart of the North American Continent. Its proponents seek the deepening of the present channel in order to allow ocean freighters to carry their cargoes through the St. Lawrence River up to the Great Lakes and conversely to permit our large Great Lakes freighters to reach Montreal. Coupled with this is the development on a joint basis of 2,200,000 horsepower in the international section of the St. Lawrence River with the power equally divided between the two countries.

WHAT DOES THE GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY CONSIST OF?

It consists of five steps which are its chief assets and its chief liabilities, assets because of its potential power development; liabilities because these steps must be leveled out if the seaway is to be opened to deep-water navigation.

The five steps consists of—

1. St. Mary's Falls lying between Lake Superior and Lake Huron, where there is a drop of 21 feet.

2. The St. Clair-Detroit passage joining Lake Huron and Lake Erie, where there is a drop of 8 feet.

3. Niagara Falls, which separates Lake Erie from Lake Ontario and which has a drop of 326 feet.

4. The International Rapids section and the Lachine section, where power development is to take place, a distance of 183 miles and where the drop is 226 feet.

5. Montreal to the sea, the portion which lies wholly in Canadian territory and in which there is a drop of 20 feet.

These five steps will, it is estimated, develop approximately 9,000,000 horsepower divided as follows—

	Horsepower
At Niagara	3,600,000
In the International Rapids section	2,200,000
In the Beauharnois or Soulanges section	2,000,000
In the Lachine section	1,200,000

All of this power is Canadian with the exception of 1,800,000 horsepower at Niagara and the American share of 1,100,000 horsepower in the International Rapids section.

IS THERE A SHORTAGE OF POWER IN THIS COUNTRY?

As a result of the rapid postwar expansion of industry in Canada, together with a constantly rising consumption of domestic power, the province of Ontario has been, for the past few years, subjected to an acute shortage of power to meet demands. This is further accentuated by the present increasing activity in defense production. The International Rapids section with its 2,000,000 horsepower potential—one-half of which belongs to Canada—constitutes the remaining large block of undeveloped hydro power available to Ontario in the southern portion of the Province.

Insofar as the Province of Quebec is concerned, with the increased output at Beauharnois to be available in the near future, the power situation in the large industrial area adjacent to Montreal will be satisfactory for but a few years. The only other sources of undeveloped power remaining in that district will be Carillon and the Lachine Rapids, the latter forming part of a new Lachine Canal envisaged in the development of this Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway.

WHY IS THE UNITED STATES SO ANXIOUS TO DEVELOP THIS POWER?

There is a much more critical shortage of hydroelectric power in New England and in northern New York State than there is in Canada. A very high proportion of the electric power produced in these areas is steam generated and costs considerably more per horsepower than electricity produced by hydro. The provision of an additional 1,000,000 horsepower in the International Rapids section will be absorbed as quickly as it can be produced, thus replacing the more costly steam-generated electric power.

WHY IS THE PROJECT NECESSARY FROM A NAVAGATIONAL STANDPOINT?

Controlling depths of the seaway at present are 22 feet from Lake Superior to Prescott, 14 feet from Prescott to Montreal, and 35 feet from Montreal to the sea. It is therefore clear that the seaway has been completed except for that portion which lies between Montreal and Kingston, including the International Rapids section. This is the bottleneck which must be removed to allow deep-sea vessels to ply between the ocean and the Great Lakes.

The newly discovered iron-ore fields of northern Quebec and Labrador can be most speedily exploited only when the St. Lawrence seaway is completed. For years the backbone of the steel industry in the United States has been high-grade iron ores of the Mesabi Range to the south of Lake Superior. The high-grade ores from these fields are being rapidly depleted and that factor accounts for the interest in the fields of Quebec and Labrador, where upward of 400,000,000 tons of high-grade ores have been amply proven.

WHAT IS THE COST OF THE GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY PROJECT?

The latest estimate places the total cost, including the full development of power, at $806,000,000, of which $336,000,000 is Canada's share and $470,000,000 is the United States share. Of this amount Canada has already spent $132,000,000 for the construction of the Welland Ship Canal, leaving a balance of $204,000,000 still to be expended.

The United States has already implemented one of the provisions of the 1941 agreement by the completion in 1943, at a cost of $15,000,000, of a new lock at Sault Ste. Marie. This new facility was built to conform to waterway standards, and the United States has also invested $17,000,000 in dredging the St. Clair channels to a depth of 25 feet for downbound traffic and 20 feet for upbound traffic.

A considerable sum of money has been invested by Canada in the present system of canals and in the lower St. Lawrence. Over and above the $132,000,000 already spent by Canada for the construction of the Welland ship canal, mention should be made of the expenditure of $50,000,000 on the present canals of only 14 feet in depth, such as Lachine, Soulanges, and Cornwall. These are the present navigation facilities which constitute the bottleneck and would be replaced by new canals providing for 27-foot navigation.

East of Montreal, for a distance of about 180 miles, the St. Lawrence River has been deepened to 35 feet, at a cost of nearly $100,000,000. The interest of Canada in the St. Lawrence seaway is, therefore, not a new venture, since nearly $300,000,000 has already been spent.

These sums of money were invested in the waterway in order to facilitate the movement of Canada's wheat crop by water from the head of the Lakes to the sea, a distance of 2,000 miles. Thus, Canada's wheat was able to reach the European market and there compete favorably with the wheat of other countries. Again these sums were spent to prevent our wheat crop from being exported to European countries via a water route provided by the United States through the Erie Canal and the Hudson River to New York City. The completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway to a full depth of 27 feet would guarantee forever an all-water route for our Canadian wheat and other products at a substantially reduced transportation cost through the elimination of transshipment at such points as Prescott, Port Colborne, and Port McNicoll.

WHAT INTERESTS OPPOSE THE GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND WHY?

Powerful interests in the United States oppose the project. First, there is a group of fitters and owners of ships of less than 12-foot draft who see in the development of the St. Lawrence a danger to the New York State barge canal now competing with the present all-water route from the head of the Lakes to Montreal. Then there are the American railways running between the Great Lakes and the Port of New York and competing against the New York State canal route for the transportation of merchandise to such an extent that their rates, at certain times of the year, are reduced by half. A third group operate a fleet of barges in competition with the American railways and consider that the development of the St. Lawrence would go a long way toward putting them out of business even though they are generously subsidized by the American Government.

These and other interests represent various enterprises engaged in competition against each other but in full agreement in standing together to oppose the St. Lawrence waterway project.

COULD CANADA PROCEED INDEPENDENTLY OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE COMPLETION OF THE GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY?

Failing ratification by the United States Congress of the 1941 agreement in either its present or in a mutually agreed modified form, it would then be possible for the International Joint Commission to consider an application of New York State and the Province of Ontario for permission to develop power alone on a joint basis in the International Rapids Section. Such an application has already been made to the Governments of the two countries but has not yet been referred to the International Joint Commission. Other than the 1941 agreement between Canada and the United States, there is no obstacle to prevent Canada from undertaking the construction of works necessary for 27-foot navigation between Montreal and Kingston wholly on the Canadian side of the boundary.

Here, then, is the position. Canada has entered into an agreement with the United States for the joint development of power and navigation on the St. Lawrence. Canada believes that this agreement, with certain modifications if need be, is the best for all parties concerned. It was arrived at after years of careful study by competent engineers, both American and Canadian. We in Canada hope that this agreement will be implemented.

But let there be no mistake about it. This is a power and navigation scheme, not a power scheme alone as some interests would seem to indicate. If it is impossible to obtain the joint development referred to in the 1941 agreement, then consideration must be given—as indeed it already has—to an all Canadian route.

SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Mr. O'MAHONEY obtained the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask the Senator to yield for a matter of personal privilege, that is, for the administration of the oath of office to Hon. HENRY C. DWORSHAK as a Senator from the State of Idaho. I have a telegram in my hand from the Governor of the State of Idaho certifying to his election. The telegram reads as follows:

BOISE, IDAHO, November 27, 1950.

Hon. LESLIE L. BIFFLE,
Secretary, United States Senate:

Idaho official canvass complete show HENRY C. DWORSHAK elected to United States Senate for unexpired term ending January 2, 1955. Certificate in mail.

C. A. ROBINS,
Governor, State of Idaho.

While the official document has not yet been received, yet the Senate gave unanimous consent yesterday to the swearing in of Senator-elect SMITH of North Carolina under the same conditions and, if there is no objection, I should like very much to have the Senator from Idaho sworn in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield for that purpose?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator-elect will come forward, the Chair will administer the oath of office to him.

Mr. DWORSHAK, escorted by Mr. WHERRY, advanced to the desk, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to him by the Vice President.

STATEHOOD FOR ALASKA

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 331) to provide for the admission of Alaska into the Union.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, ordinarily when the majority leader makes a motion to take up a bill the motion is agreed to by unanimous consent. I make the parliamentary inquiry as to whether or not the motion has been presented that the Senate proceed to consider the Alaska statehood bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is now before the Senate. Unanimous consent was not asked. The Senator from Illinois moved that the Senate proceed to consider the bill, and that motion is before the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate unnecessarily with a discussion of the motion. Perhaps the motion of the Senator to take up the bill will be agreed to if it is submitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is debatable, as the Senator knows. If there is no desire to debate the motion, the question is on agreeing to the motion. As many as are in favor of the motion——

Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. BUTLER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does either of the Senators who have addressed the Chair desire to debate the motion itself?

Mr. WHERRY. The motion to take up the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. If the motion were agreed to the bill would automatically displace the railroad bill, would it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the motion were agreed to, it would displace that bill.

Mr. WHERRY. The question now is whether Senators desire to debate the motion, or whether they desire to vote on the motion and then debate the merits of the bill, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to consider the bill. If any Senator wishes to discuss the motion, the Chair will recognize him. If not, the Chair will put the motion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming had the floor on the motion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I did not intend to relinquish the floor. I submitted the few remarks I did make in an effort to determine whether or not there was to be any resistance to the motion. It is quite apparent that there is to be such opposition. Therefore, Mr. President, I desire to say one or two brief words on the merits of statehood before the motion itself is debated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask all Senators and others to maintain order. As is well known, the acoustics of this room are not good, and the slightest conversation can be heard everywhere, and is frequently exaggerated, depending on the position of the speaker. The Chair desires to maintain order, and the Chair is sure Senators do also. Frequently Senators and others in the Chamber indulge in conversation not knowing that it can be heard in the remotest corners. So the Chair asks the cooperation of Senators and others in the Senate in the preservation of good order.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the distinguished senior Senator from Wyoming whether it is his intention, after he makes the observations he said he would present to the Members of the Senate, to ask for a vote on the motion to take up the bill, or to ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider the bill, or is it the intention of the Senator now not to do that, but to proceed to debate the motion to take up the bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is my purpose to state very briefly some of the reasons why I believe the statehood bills should be taken up and should be passed by the Senate. That will not take very long. When I have done that, I shall take my seat, and then we shall have a demonstration as to whether or not the motion to consider the bill is going to be debated.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The situation which confronts the Senate is very simple. We know that from a parliamentary point of view the motion to take up a bill is debatable. We know that opponents of a particular bill on many occasions in the past have taken advantage of this rule to prevent consideration. I have felt that possibly that might not be the case with respect to the statehood bills, for I believe there are very pressing conditions in the world today which ought to convince Senators without exception, that this is a time for action, and not a time for talk.

Mr. President, I am in a very serious mood this morning, because I am convinced that the whole American theory of government is now hanging in the balance. The world is confronted with an ideological conflict between totalitarianism on the one hand and self determination upon the other, and no amount of talk can obscure that fact. The news which came to us yesterday and which comes to us today from Korea and the appearance in the United Nations Assembly of a delegation of Red Chinese—I say "Red" Chinese, not only because their hands are dripping with the blood of American citizens, but because they are the spokesmen of the Kremlin—to accuse the United States of imperialistic colonial designs upon the peoples and the territory of the Orient. This news, I say, emphasizes as no words of mine or of any other person could emphasize, the enormity of the peril in which free institutions today find themselves.

Alaska was purchased by the Government of the United States from the Government of Russia about 83 years ago. The Secretary of State who negotiated the treaty for the transfer foresaw in part the developments of which we are now the witnesses. In urging the ratification of the treaty upon the President of the United States and upon the United States Senate, Secretary Seward used these words:

> The Pacific Ocean, its shores, its islands and vast regions beyond, will become the chief theater of events in the world's great hereafter.

There in a dozen words, an American public official more than 80 years ago described the future as we are now experiencing it.

STATEHOOD THE ANSWER TO SOVIET PROPAGANDA

I want to say to the Members of the Senate that in my opinion the case for statehood for Alaska and Hawaii can be very simply and directly put forth. In the first place it is a complete answer to Soviet propaganda. The Pacific is now, as Secretary Seward foresaw, the center of world conflict. The issue is whether the people of that area and the people of all the world are to enjoy self-government or to be condemned to live under totalitarian dictatorship. By what the Congress and the United States do now with respect to statehood for these two Territories we shall be judged by the peoples of the Orient. If we grant statehood to these two Territories, it will be a demonstration of our sincerity in the protestations which we have been making to the world of our devotion to the ideals of self-determination and of liberty.

If we deny statehood to these two Territories, the oriental mind will be convinced that the Kremlin is correct in accusing us of imperialistic colonial designs upon the peoples of Asia.

Immediate passage of these bills will be the most effective answer we can give, short of force, to the false propaganda of the masters of the Kremlin now being uttered by the tongues of the Chinese Red puppets of Moscow before the Assembly of the United Nations.

ALASKA AND HAWAII HAVE EARNED STATEHOOD

Second, Alaska and Hawaii have earned statehood. Alaska became a Territory of the United States 83 years ago, 17 years less than a century, and its people under the Territorial form of government have had a popularly elected Territorial legislature since 1912.

Hawaii, by her own voluntary act, chose to surrender her status as an independent republic and to join her fortunes with the United States 52 years ago. The Republic of Hawaii and the Government of the United States of America, by a formal treaty made in Washington on June 16, 1897, and thereafter ratified by both Governments, agreed that Hawaii—and I am quoting from the treaty—"should be incorporated into the United States as an integral part thereof."

Since that date Hawaii has amply demonstrated its political maturity and, like Alaska, has served its apprenticeship in self-government under a Territorial legislature.

Alaska is rich in undeveloped resources. Its minerals, its forests, its sea products, and its great reserve of untapped raw materials, afford an unparalleled opportunity for the development of a prosperous new State.

The economic record of Alaska is clear. Untapped resources beyond imagination are waiting to be developed by freemen who govern themselves as a State of the American Union.

In 1912 the Congress passed the Organic Act of Alaska. By this law and by the treaty of purchase itself, Alaska was incorporated into the United States. Its right to eventual statehood was clear from that act of incorporation. The same is true with respect to Hawaii. The hope of eventual statehood has been held out for almost 50 years to the people of both these Territories. And now at the climax of this international conflict of ideologies between totalitarian dictatorship on the one hand and self-determination upon the other, we are asked, or we are going to be asked, not to grant statehood to either of these Territories.

ARE WE TO HAVE ARGUMENTS OF EVASION?

Arguments will be advanced here the nature of which has already been clearly indicated. It will be said that we should not set aside the bill to modify the Railway Labor Act, reported from the Committee on Labor and Welfare, although it is clear that the bill, recommended by a House committee, has never received a rule from the Rules Committee of the House, and that in this brief session of Congress the Rules Committee, which declined before adjournment to grant a rule, will not grant a rule, will not grant one now.

Obviously, in those circumstances any attempt upon the part of the Senate to take up time by debating that bill, which cannot be passed, would be only a diversionary attempt to defeat by indirect action what could not be defeated by direct action, because the votes are here in the Senate of the United States, without regard to party, to pass the statehood bills.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I think the RECORD also should show that in connection with the so-called railway bill there is an amendment pending, offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], which would attach the FEPC bill to the railway bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad the Senator from Illinois called my attention to that. In other words, opposition to the Railway Labor Act amendments is very vigorous, very insistent. The bill failed of passage before Congress adjourned in September only because of this deep-seated opposition.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The fact that an amendment in the nature of an FEPC bill is offered, does not change the situation, because, of course, that amendment is subject to a motion to lay on the table, and we could dispose of it without debate. So I do not think the suggestion by the majority leader that in some way that amendment is going to prolong the debate on the railroad labor bill is a correct implication.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. My point is, I may say, and I am sure this was the point of the Senator from Illinois, that the fact that that amendment was offered is of itself a pretty clear demonstration of the fact that there is vigorous and deep-seated opposition to that measure. But regardless of that fact, I call the attention of the Senate to the failure of the Rules Committee of the House to grant a rule.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Ohio would indicate, from the statement he made, that all that is necessary to do is to move to lay on the table the FEPC bill, when offered as an amendment; apparently he thinks that the votes are available to lay it on the table. It is questionable whether that is the case. Certainly until those who are vitally interested in FEPC knew that the votes to lay that measure on the table were available, a filibuster would start. The Senator must know that to be so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the point is that any debate upon the railway labor bill is debate upon a measure which cannot pass, and therefore can be primarily designed only to divert attention from the statehood bills and to prevent them from coming to a vote.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. I wish to suggest to the Senator that I do not think that is true at all. The railway labor bill was brought up by the railway labor people. In the form in which it was presented, I objected to it. When they were willing to amend it so as to insert in the Railway Mediation Act exactly the amendments with reference to the closed-shop and the check-off which are now in the Taft-Hartley law, I agreed to go along with it, and so I feel obligated to go along with it. I do not think it involves as much controversy as the Alaska statehood bill, so far as that is concerned.

Once a measure is presented by the majority leadership and is taken up by the Senate, certainly it is an unusual maneuver to set it aside.

I see no reason why the debate on the railway labor bill should be any longer than the debate on the Alaska statehood bill. I cannot agree with the Senator that there is any undying opposition to the railway labor bill. Certainly it is one on which those who have most greatly differed have compromised their differences. I think it would take a rather short time to pass the bill.

Suggestion is made that an FEPC amendment would be offered to the bill. Of course, an FEPC amendment could be offered to the Alaska statehood bill tomorrow. That does not seem to me to have any bearing on the question of whether we should set aside a bill which is now the unfinished business of the Senate, and on which I think there is substantial agreement among those who are most interested in the subject, and then, instead, have the Senate take up the Alaska statehood bill.

Permit me to say that, if, following the Senate's action on the railway labor bill, the Alaska statehood bill should come up, I would have no objection.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. When the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] discussed the matter on the floor of the Senate yesterday, he indicated that he was agreeing that the bill should be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. As the Senator knows, the motion which is made under such circumstances is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of another bill, not that the Senate move to lay aside temporarily the bill which then is the unfinished business. When a motion to proceed to the consideration of another bill is agreed to the bill previously before the Senate goes back to the calendar. Of course, by unanimous consent the Senate can also lay aside a bill and proceed to take up another bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

I was about to say that, so far as I am concerned, if it should appear that the railway labor bill can be passed without debate, and that it will not be used as an instrument of delay and of defeat of the statehood bills, I would have no objection to requesting unanimous consent to have the motion temporarily laid aside, so that that might be determined.

What I am emphasizing now, Mr. President, is one simple statement, namely, that the Senate will presently have to decide, either openly or indirectly, whether it is going to meet the question of statehood by a direct vote or whether Members of the Senate desire to exercise their right—which is their right under the rule—to defeat statehood by irrelevant talk about other measures.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not think we should quibble about the actual facts which are involved in these two bills. Every Member of the Senate knows that the House of Representatives committee is not going to grant a rule in connection with the railway-labor bill. That was tried before the adjournment was taken in September, but it was found impossible to obtain such a rule.

The railway-labor bill is not going to pass at this session, so there is no use to use the railway-labor bill now as a medium in an effort to defeat or prevent action upon the statehood bills.

The truth of the matter is that the statehood bills for both Alaska and Hawaii have passed the House of Representatives by large votes, so far as the majority is concerned. As between the railway-labor bill and the bills for statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, the only bills which have a chance of being enacted at this session are the latter, not the former. If the Senate desires to do so, certainly we have an opportunity to pass the Hawaii and the Alaska statehood bills; but we do not have an opportunity to pass the railway-labor bill, as I understand the situation existing at the present time in the House of Representatives. So there is no use quibbling about the railway-labor bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the Senator is quite correct.

Mr. President, I am merely trying to make it clear that if those who wish to discuss the railway-labor bill in good faith desire to get action, and if there is a real opportunity to get action upon that measure, I would be the last person to say that it should be set aside.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator from Alabama will pardon me, I prefer not to yield, because I do not wish the RECORD to be burdened by irrelevant discussion; and I do not wish, by participating in irrelevant discussion, to contribute to an indirect attack upon the statehood bills.

So I wish to complete this statement, which I carefully prepared, in order that it should be brief, before I engage in any further discussion in regard to the railway-labor bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for just a moment, let me say that I had charge of the Railway Labor Act amendments when they were previously before the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I was then acting for the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Sentator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], who at that time could not be in the Senate.

If the Senator will examine the RECORD, I think he will find that the statehood bills did not come before the House of Representatives by means of any special rule coming out of the Rules Committee. To the contrary, they came before the House of Representatives under the new general rule, which the Senator will recall the House adopted at the beginning of the present Congress. Therefore, it might well be that even if the House Rules Committee would not grant a rule so that the Railway Labor Act amendments could come before the House, they could come before the House of Representatives anyway, exactly in the way that the statehood bills came before the House of Representatives.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly so; that might well be.

Mr. HILL. In further reference to the House of Representatives, I wish to say that with the agreement on the part of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare on the amendments to which the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] has adverted, there was unanimous agreement on the part of the committee in support of this bill. No member of the committee either on the Republican side or on the Democratic side, was opposed to the bill. All of us were in support of the bill.

So far as concerns consideration of the bill at the present session, before the adjournment was taken, as Senators will recall, we had a very brief time available for that purpose. The Senator from Ohio, acting for the Senator from Utah, had an opportunity to make an explanation of the bill; but that was all that was done. There was no opportunity for any other Senator to discuss the bill. Therefore the bill has not really been considered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure the Senator from Alabama will not take it amiss if I ask him to permit me to proceed with my discussion.

Mr. HILL. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming has the floor.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming permit me to make a very brief statement in regard to my objections?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. TAFT. I merely wish to explain that when I vote against the Senator's motion, I do so because I feel personally obligated to vote in that way, in view of the promises I have made to do all I can to have the Senate proceed with consideration of the railway labor bill. It is not a matter of personal opposition; but after I have agreed to that course, I cannot vote to set the bill aside.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator for his statement.

BASIC REASONS FOR ACTION

Mr. President, I was endeavoring to point out briefly the basic reasons why I believe the Senate should act, and should act now, to consider and pass the statehood bills.

I have pointed out that in Alaska there are vast untapped economic resources.

Hawaii has already reached an economic status quite as stable as that of any other State in the Federal Union, and more prosperous than that of many existing States.

BOTH POLITICAL PARTIES ARE PLEDGED TO STATEHOOD

Since early in the present century Democratic and Republican national conventions alike have been holding out the hope of statehood to the people of Hawaii. First, it was couched in general language promising the fullest measure of self-government, or the fullest measure of home rule. I have chosen those two phrases; one comes from a Democratic Party platform, and one comes from a Republican Party platform.

The Democratic platform in 1940 pledged "a larger measure of self-government leading to statehood" for Alaska and Hawaii.

In 1948 the Democratic platform declared that "We urge immediate statehood for Hawaii and Alaska," and in the Republican platform that "We favor eventual statehood for Hawaii."

Now the House of Representatives has passed both statehood bills by substantial margins. It would be a cruel disappointment to the people of both Territories if the Senate should now withhold the grant of statehood, particularly in the light of world conditions.

Alaska is separated from Siberia by only 58 miles across the Bering Straits.

Hawaii is in the center of the Pacific Ocean. Populated by Polynesian, Asiatic, European, and American people who have learned to live together under the American system, loyal and devoted supporters of the principle of self-determination.

If the Senate passes these bills, no iron curtain can bar from any people on the globe the knowledge of our action. If by any possibility we should be blind enough to turn our backs upon the American principle of popular sovereignty and fail to pass these bills, Russian propaganda will not be necessary to disseminate throughout the world the knowledge of our failure.

Mr. President, in the light of what is now going on upon the stage of the world, it is impossible for me to understand why the Senate of the United States, directly, or by indirection, should prevent a favorable vote upon both of these statehood bills. By favorable action in the Senate we are sending a message to all the peoples of the world. We are giving them by our action direct and unanswerable testimony as to what we believe about the principle of self-determination.

Failure to grant statehood will weaken our efforts through the United Nations to bring an era of peace to the world. Are we blind to the fact that we are now wavering upon the brink of a third world war? There are those who urge that the only answer to our great dilemma—a political dilemma and an economic dilemma—is to move immediately into atomic warfare, and upon the other hand there are great statesmen, followers of the Christian principle, who are endeavoring by negotiation to prevent the terrible slaughter of a third world war.

THE GRAVITY OF OUR DILEMMA

Can anybody deceive himself as to the situation we face? A third world war would destroy the very foundations of civilization. But, more than that, it would destroy the sacred principle upon which the American Government was founded—that people can and should govern themselves.

A dictatorship seeks to impose its will upon the whole world and upon all the peoples of the world. That dictatorship seeks to convince the masses of mankind that democracy is outmoded and should be forgotten, that it has run its day, that the system of private property is a failure, that we must have government to direct us by arbitrary decrees as to what we must do. Yet, though confronted by this great issue, knowing that it was necessary for us in the defense of our Nation and of our principles to expend huge sums for defense, we have hesitated to make the appropriations, we have held back, we have fooled ourselves into thinking that somehow or other this cup may be taken away from our lips and that we shall not have to drink the bitter dregs of a controlled economy and of totalitarian government if we drift into another world war.

Can we deceive ourselves into failing to realize that if we go into a third world war every step of the individual and every act would have to come under the regulation of the Government? It is because we do realize it that, over and over again, we have tried to cut down appropriations and avoid the huge expenditures that world conflict, nay, even preparation for such a conflict, entails. I remember the debate upon this floor a year ago when the appropriation bill came from the Appropriations Committee to provide for the Air Force. The issue was, should we have a 58-group Air Force or a 48-group Air Force. We fooled ourselves into believing that we could get along with a 48-group Air Force, though we knew at that moment that Russia was straining every totalitarian power to build an air force superior to ours. We were hoping that the choice would somehow be taken out of our hands, and so the Senate said, "No, we will appropriate only for a 48-group Air Force." The House of Representatives declined to agree. The bill was passed with funds for a 58-group Air Force. But, so strong was the desire not to engage in deficit spending even for defense, that, though the money was appropriated, it was not expended, and we did not get the 58-group Air Force. We now know we were wrong. We are now ready to appropriate larger sums.

Last August, we did not hesitate to appropriate $17,000,000,000 for national defense. A supplemental appropriation bill will be presented to this brief session of Congress, and it will be passed.

FORCE OR REASON

There are two ways and only two by which to settle this dilemma, and let no one be deceived about it. One way is by force. Another way is by reason. If we follow the line of force, disaster will come upon the face of the earth. The ideals of popular sovereignty will have to be forgotten, and all the fine words and phrases we have been using about our belief in self-determination will be so much trash for the wastepaper basket. Against that we have the opportunity, painful though it may be, annoying thought it may be, wearying though it may be, of appealing to the innate sense of justice of the human mind.

I have confidence in people, whether they are trained and educated or whether they have never had a day's education. The innate motives of the human heart are decent, they are free, they do not tolerate dictatorship, they want freedom for everyone. But now, by what we do here, we shall go far to decide whether we shall follow the path of reason instead of the path of force, whether we shall follow the path of self-determination and democracy instead of the path of totalitarian rule. Let no one for one single moment deceive himself into believing that the world will not know and be deeply disappointed if we deny statehood to the people of these two Territories, who have so richly earned it.

Mr. President, there are many things I could say about the merits of this bill. I am not talking about the merits now. I hope to have an opportunity to do that later. I am talking now about the desirability of having the Senate take up these bills, one after the other, and thereby make our concept of free government clear to all the world, particularly to those representatives of the United Nations into whose ears Jacob Malik and the Red Chinese puppets are at this moment pouring streams of vilification, abuse, and falsehood against America and American principles. They say we are Fascist imperialists. They say we want to suppress people, that we do not want to give them the right of self-government. They say we want to make money out of Alaska, that we want to make profit out of Hawaii by exploiting the people of Hawaii and the people of Alaska. They say that all our talk about freedom and self-government is just so much delusion, so much propaganda to deceive the peoples of the world.

We have it in our power here today to tell all of these people, wherever they reside—in Asia, in Europe, in Africa, and in the islands of the Pacific—that America does believe in freedom for the individual and in the right and ability of people wherever they are to govern themselves.

Mr. President, if we are to debate the subject upon the issues I shall take the floor again. However, I hope that we may now reach the decision that the bills should be taken up.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. From the Senator's last statement I assume that if the Alaska statehood bill is taken up on its merits the Senator will go into some detail on the question of taxation, the question of Alaska being separated from the United States by approximately 570 miles, and similar questions?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. We shall endeavor to answer all reasonable questions.

Mr. BUTLER obtained the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). A quorum is present.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I was personally very much interested in the statement made by the distinguished chairman of the Commitee on Interior and Insular Affairs [Mr. O'MAHONEY] in support of the motion that was made by the majority leader yesterday. At the conclusion of his statement I said to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming that if the vote is to be had ultimately on the basis of oratorical flights he perhaps will win. I also said to him that if the vote is to be based on facts and logic I believe the motion will fail.

Mr. President, I am sorry that the distinguished majority leader of the Senate [Mr. LUCAS] has seen fit to move to displace the unfinished business and to take up the Alaska statehood bill (H. R. 331) at this time. I sincerely hope the Senate will not act favorably on this motion.

The bill we now have under consideration, S. 3295, is a highly important measure to many people. It certainly deserves more consideration than it has had to date. Whatever its merits, it is entitled to full and fair discussion.

If this motion should carry, it would simply mean that S. 3295 has been shelved for the duration of this Congress. We all know that the Alaska statehood measure if it is made the pending business, will require considerable discussion.

There will also be an appropriation bill and perhaps a tax bill and other measures related to the international crisis in which we find ourselves. In other words, if this motion is adopted it definitely means placing S. 3295 on the shelf for the remainder of this Congress.

When the regular session was adjourned a few months ago, S. 3295 was made the unfinished business deliberately so that action could be taken on it immediately upon our return here this week. There was very little discussion on it before we adjourned. There was not sufficient time. I believe it was generally understood that action could be taken on it promptly, and for that reason it was placed first on the list. We do not have too much time during this short session of Congress. There is a real danger that we will not be able to take action on very many measures.

If the Alaska bill is brought up now, I am very much afraid that it will tie up the legislative program of the Senate so thoroughly that nothing at all can be accomplished at this session. If we could take up some measure on which there is less controversy and less probability of extended debate, we might at least have something to show for our efforts for the short session.

Mr. President, I simply cannot understand the urgency of taking up this question of Alaska statehood at this particular time. The Territory of Alaska has always received fair and equitable treatment from the National Congress and from Federal Territorial officials under its present form of government. At least any problems it has had in its relations with the Federal Government cannot be fairly laid to its territorial status. They are not problems which will be cured by passage of this bill. There is no pressing emergency that requires the immediate grant of statehood to the Territory. There is not the slightest need for haste on this matter.

Mr. President, I was somewhat impressed by the sentimental appeal made by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming for immediate action on these two statehood bills because of the international situation. I am not in agreement with the Senator in the views which he expressed during the course of his speech, that it is necessary that the United States Government take action on the proposed legislation now on the basis that we may lose friends if we do not take such action. I believe most of us have visited Hawaii and Alaska. We know that those Territories are inhabited by fine people. I doubt if there is a single person in either Territory who would be guilty of making the statement that he would want to do anything drastic if the statehood bills are not passed now because of the international situation. In other words, I do not think the people of the two Territories measure their patriotism by any such standard as that.

The people who live in those Territories are a brave people. The inhabitants of Hawaii have made a remarkable record, one that cannot be equaled in arms by the forces of any State in the Union. I am perfectly sure they are willing to bide their time so that all the complex situations existing there at this time can be taken into consideration by Senators when they vote on a bill that is impossible to repeal should it be passed.

A decision by the Congress to grant statehood to any Territory is in some respects a unique type of legislation. It is a decision that is irrevocable. It cannot be reversed. Once statehood has been granted, it cannot be taken away. In that respect it is different from almost any other type of legislation with which we have to deal.

If we pass a tax law and it turns out to be a bad law, we can always repeal it and undo the damage. If we make a mistake in any of our measures regulating industry or labor or agriculture, those mistakes can be corrected as soon as they are discovered. With rare exceptions, we can repeal any law we pass if we find subsequently that it is not working out as we had intended.

That is not the case with a grant of statehood to a Territory. The grant of statehood is a grant of sovereignty. Once sovereignty has been granted, it can never be withdrawn.

What is the reason for this undue haste in bringing up the Alaska statehood question at this particular time? I do not profess to know all the reasons, but perhaps I can suggest one. Perhaps there is a desire to bring into the Senate two more so-called liberal votes to offset the losses that have been suffered by this administration as a result of the recent elections. Perhaps there is some idea of overturning the decision of the electorate insofar as possible by mobilizing two more votes for the administration on critical issues.

If that is the plan, I believe it is an unworthy one. The Eighty-first Congress is heading into its last month of existence. It has its duties to perform, but those duties are mainly of an emergency nature. This is a "lame duck" Congress, and it does not really represent the most recent expression of the popular will. It has no real right to make decisions which will be binding on our Nation forever. Statehood legislation is one subject on which we in this short session have no moral right to pass.

I do not believe the people will particularly appreciate it if this "lame duck" session tries to slip in two more left-wing Senators to overcome the losses sustained by the administration on November 7. If the elections prove anything, they prove that the people have had enough of left-wing policies, excessive spending, and financial mismanagement. One of the soundest judgments on the elections I have seen was made by a distinguished Democrat, chairman of the Democratic Party for many years, Mr. James A. Farley. I have here an article by David Lawrence, which appeared in the New York Herald Tribune on November 22, 1950, from which I shall now read. The article is entitled "Farley's View of Election—Blow to Unsound Liberalism." It reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, November 21.—Probably the sagest of the political observers of our times is James A. Farley, who, after twice piloting a Presidential nominee to success at the polls, nevertheless parted from that same individual on a matter of principle—opposing a break in the third-term tradition.

What Mr. Farley says now in analyzing the recent election is particularly significant and revealing. For it is the opinion of a man who, more than any other outside of public office, knows what the Democratic Party really means to its followers and what it can mean in pursuing a course that might be termed sound instead of unsound liberalism.

The man who not only served in the late President Roosevelt's Cabinet as Postmaster General but who led the Democratic National Committee is certainly entitled to speak about the Democratic Party as an institution.

OPPOSES A LABOR PARTY

"First," says Mr. Farley concerning the last election, "it showed in Ohio and in several other places that neither the Republican nor the Democratic Parties, nor the workingman himself, nor the voters generally, want an independent labor party. I have many times made myself clear on this subject.

"Since labor unions became an effective force in our economy it has been suggested by some that labor might conceivably form a political party of its own, with the avowed objective of presenting its aims through the medium of a platform sponsored by an independent labor party.

"I want to say that I am definitely opposed to such an idea because I am a firm believer in the two-party system.

"The great danger since the two big labor federations have set up their own political organizations is that in many districts and in some States these organizations might well supplant one or both of the regular parties. The result of this would be the elimination of policies by one issue and by one group in the community. That is quite contrary to the whole theory of government in this Republic under a two-party system. The fear of that in Ohio I know in this year's election drove many Democrats to vote for TAFT. And it is also clear that thousands of union members refused to be told how to vote by the political arms of the unions and voted for TAFT in protest."

CITES EXPERIENCE IN NEW YORK

This is a frank exposition by one who knows the trends in party fortunes and the changing attitudes of voters. Mr. Farley, however, not only refers to what happened in Ohio but in his latest speech—made in the deep south at Tampa, Fla.—he calls attention to the way the American Labor Party, which he says "came to be heavily influenced by Communists," ran a ticket in New York State that was thoroughly buried by the regular party vote. He adds that he is "happy to note that the outlook is very dark for third or fourth parties in this country."

The former chief of the Democratic National Committee condemns also "the Brannan plan, socialized medicine, and other unsubstantial experiments," and calls on the President to summon the leaders of the South to solve civil-rights problems "on a regional and State basis."

"To pass a law," he remarks with reference to this issue that has roused the South, "especially a Federal law, is never the best way to correct an injustice."

What Mr. Farley says to his fellow Democrats and to the Nation will be discussed widely. For it is the beginning of a very important dissent against new dealism and fair dealism which has been smoldering for some time but which is now coming to the surface as the independent Democrats, forced to choose between radicalism under the Democratic banner or anti-radicalism in the opposite party, are voting in favor of Republican candidates. Thus they do not hesitate to leave their party for the time being—at least until the Democratic Party can get back on the track again.

Mr. President, I have inserted that quotation from Mr. Farley because I think it indicates a danger which we face at this time in passing too quickly on any proposed legislation, especially measures which have the great importance of the statehood bills.

I have nothing but the kindest feelings toward the people of the two Territories. I have visited them; I know many of them personally. However, they are not their own bosses. The situation in regard to those Territories is considerably like the situation we find in some of the States in the Union, where the labor group—and it is the most radical labor group—controls the elections. If statehood were granted, the very moment that they wanted to do so, the labor group could send to the Senate two of the most radical type of labor leaders.

Mr. President, it is customary for the proponents of Alaska statehood to attempt to place the discussion on a basis of whether we should grant to a group of deserving people the rights to which they are morally entitled. That was the general line of argument of the President in his letter urging that we take up this proposed legislation. This type of argument is intended to make it appear that those of us opposing statehood are unjustly depriving worthy fellow citizens of full equality and are trying to hold them down in some manner.

Mr. President, it happens that I am well acquainted and on very friendly terms with a great many of the leading residents of Alaska. In my experience the people of Alaska, generally speaking, are fine people, true pioneers in the American tradition, responsible, industrious, and intelligent, engaged in carrying the American flag to a distant outpost against great obstacles. I want to do anything I can to help those people build up the Territory and develop its possibilities. If statehood would help them do that, I might be for statehood. Statehood will not help them; it will hurt them, in my opinion. That is the principal reason I am opposed to statehood for Alaska at this time.

Many Members of the Senate, I am afraid, may approach this question with somewhat of a false picture of the actual conditions that we confront in dealing with Alaska. All of us, I know, thinking back on the history of our own State, are inclined to sympathize with the aspirations of any group of pioneers who have had the courage to go into the wilderness and to try to create a civilization there. In most of our States, a wilderness was turned into a settled society by the unremitting efforts of just such a group of pioneers as we now find in Alaska. For that reason, perhaps many Members of the Senate may feel that statehood is a natural, inevitable climax of political development for any Territory once a start at settlement has been made.

Unfortunately, conditions in Alaska are radically different from those which existed in any of our States at the time statehood was granted. We are not justified in taking the history of settlement of the States within our continental borders as an example of what will happen in Alaska if statehood should be granted.

In all the present States, settlement proceeded rapidly up to the limits of cultivation as the frontier moved westward. Once a start had been made by a few pioneers, others came along rapidly to take up farms or to develop the mineral and other resources. Statehood was usually granted to each territory soon after the first settlements were made, but statehood was never to any real degree the cause of the development of those States. The economic development proceeded without regard to the grant of statehood. It was based on the westward movement of additional homesteaders, the development of transportation, and the like.

In Alaska the situation is totally different. Alaska is not in any real sense a new territory. We have been familiar with its possibilities—such as they are—for a long, long time. It was settled by white men—the Russians—before Nebraska, for example, was settled by the homesteaders coming from the East.

Americans thoroughly explored its potentialities as long ago as the turn of the century, during the days of the gold rush. A wave of prospectors journeyed there at that time to settle the river valleys and develop the mineral resources much in the same manner as other waves of prospectors settled portions of our Western States.

Gold was discovered in California shortly before 1850, and that discovery started a wave of migration which increased the population of California to almost 1,500,000 people by 1900, 50 years later. When gold was discovered in Alaska, however, it did not create a corresponding wave of migration to the Territory. Those who found gold simply took it out and went home. There were no others to take their place. Fifty years after the discovery of gold in Alaska there are, not 1,500,000 people, as in the case of California, but somewhere around 100,000. Nearly half of them are in Alaska only because Federal jobs have taken them there.

What are the actual conditions that we find in Alaska? If Alaska should be admitted as a State, it would have two principal distinctions; it would be by far the largest in area of the States, and it would have the smallest population. It would have one other distinction also—it would be by far the poorest of the States.

To us who live in fully settled areas, it is difficult to picture the tremendous obstacles which arise simply because of the extreme sparseness of population. In almost all of the continental United States, one farm adjoins the next for mile after mile in all directions, while cities and towns are strung out a few miles apart along first-class highways, so that a traveler may go for hour after hour without ever getting very far from homes, farms, towns, and all the facilities of civilization. In Alaska the situation is exactly the opposite. It is possible for the traveler to go hour after hour without ever seeing another human being. The cities and towns are hundreds of miles apart. The largest centers of population have only a few thousand people. Anchorage, the largest city, has about 15,000. Most of the others have 5,000 or less. Each town is almost completely cut off from its neighbor. In many cases, the only available means of transportation are by water or by air.

The mere task of maintaining elementary transportation facilities—roads—has been too much for the residents of Alaska. Such roads as there are in Alaska have been built for the most part by the Federal Government. The Federal Government has constructed several fine highways, simply because the resources of the Territory itself have never been sufficient to support the construction of anything like an adequate system of roads.

Of all the vast land area of Alaska—365,000,000 acres—only three-tenths of 1 percent has been brought into private ownership and use during all the years since Russian explorers first discovered the Territory. Title to all the rest of the Territory is vested in the United States Government. In fact, only about 2,000,000 acres—considerably less than 1 percent—have even been surveyed.

That is the present condition of this vast Territory, upon which it is now proposed to thrust the financial burden of statehood. Already it is said that the tax burden on Alaskans is the heaviest to be found anywhere under the American flag. Statehood would approximately double that tax load.

Mr. President, before we hasten to thrust statehood upon the helpless Alaskans, whether they want it or not, let us stop and ask ourselves, Just what can Alaska gain from statehood? Since statehood will mean a change in the form of government, what kind of government will Alaska receive if statehood is granted?

During recent years the government of the Territory has been controlled almost completely by a group of political opportunists, apparently interested primarily in their own aggrandizement, headed by Gov. Ernest Gruening. Governor Gruening is, of course, immune from expressions of popular approval or disapproval by the people of Alaska, since he holds his position, apparently for life, by appointment from Washington. Through his appointive position, through his control of appointments and of the spending of Territorial tax moneys, and through his supposed influence with the powers that be in Washington, the Governor has been able completely to dominate the political life of the Territory and to control almost absolutely the Democratic Party's policies there and also the program of the Territorial legislature.

It is fair, I believe, to hold Governor Gruening and his coterie responsible for any neglects, any errors, any cases of malfeasance in office which have occurred during the past few years while they have been in full control. Certainly they have been perfectly willing to take full credit for any of the supposedly progressive advances which have been made during that period.

What kind of government have they given the Territory of Alaska during that period? As many Members of the Senate are aware, appropriations by the last— Gruening-controlled — legislature far exceeded tax revenues. As a result of this display of irresponsibility, it was not possible for the regular expenses and debts of the Territory to be paid out of Territorial revenue. That situation gave the Governor all the excuse he needed to concentrate all control over the Territory's finances in his own hands and those of his friends on the Territorial board of administration. All appropriations were frozen, and the funds appropriated by the legislature are released at the discretion or the whim of the Governor and his associates.

For example, funds for Territorial welfare programs, particularly child-welfare programs, have been frozen, and the beneficiaries have been told that they must do without the assistance they need, since the Territory cannot honor its obligations. On the other hand, funds were found with which to carry on the work of the Alaska Statehood Commission.

Funds are not available for essential Territorial functions, unless they have vote appeal, but money can be found for politically expedient programs, particularly immediately before elections. A recent example of that type of maneuvering is discussed in an editorial entitled "Public Money for Political Gain," published in the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner for October 6, 1950. Because that editorial explains the whole process so clearly, I shall now read it:

PUBLIC MONEY FOR POLITICAL GAIN

The university's board of regents revealed yesterday that it had received a wire from Gov. Ernest H. Gruening reporting the unfreezing of $561,329.40 of university funds by the Juneau Board of Administration. The newly released funds constitute the remainder of the $900,000 university appropriation originally frozen by the administration in June 1949.

Andrew Nerland, president of the board of regents, expressed deep gratification on receipt of this good bit of news.

"It means," Nerland said, "that we can now start planning modern permanent buildings that will place the University of Alaska on a par in plant facilities with schools in the United States."

While the financial picture is not quite as rosy as might appear from Governor Gruening's wire, the university's utilities program and the construction of its school of mines during 1951, nonetheless, appears assured. Actually, the sum of $561,329.40 has not been unfrozen in its entirety. Its unfreezing has merely been promised, as a closer analysis of the Juneau Administration Board's release shows.

In fact, the board of administration released only $90,000 for immediate use. The release of the remaining $651,000 is not to begin before May of 1951, in monthly payments of $100,000.

Governor Gruening's wire—apart from the good news it contains that $90,000 has been made available to the university and that a further $561,000 is promised beginning next May—offers an interesting sidelight. It affords convincing proof of the dizzying height to which Democratic processes have spiraled in Alaska under the Governor, coming as it does just 5 days before the elections.

Admirers of the Governor might want to believe that this unfreezing of funds just before elections is a pure coincidence, and is not delicately timed to influence those elections.

But it would take a stanch faith in coincidence to maintain such a view in the light of today's news—carried elsewhere in these columns—that the Juneau Board of Administration has likewise released $50,000 for use by the Territorial veterans' board. The released funds are to be used to pay out bonuses to veterans and for veterans' loans. Again the timing is remarkable—unfreezing of the funds is effected a few days before the elections.

The release of the veterans' funds, as well as those intended for the university, is laudable and to be welcomed. But the apparent political motivation that has led to the unfreezing of these funds at this particular time—6 days before the election—is less laudable. The suspicion is not unreasonable that these funds could have been released earlier, but were held back until election time for political purposes. Certainly both the university and the veterans could have made good use of these funds before now. The board of administration's explanation that the sudden release, at this time, is due to "financial improvement" does not hold water. The board fails to explain what financial improvement has taken place shortly before the elections that would suddenly allow it to unfreeze funds that previously could not be released.

The board of administration, if anything, cannot be accused of inconsistency. It has released university and veterans funds 6 days before the coming elections. Six days before this year's primaries—on April 19—it had likewise unfrozen $100,000 under a technicality of the law which was previously overlooked. This technicality, so the board of administration let it be known then, was in fine print and had therefore gone unnoticed. The fine print, remarkably, had suddenly become readable to the board as the primaries approached.

It now remains for Alaskan voters to discern the fine print in the contract they signed with Governor Gruening's administration when they voted it into power. If they look closely, they will find that the fine print is not to their advantage. It promises only one sure thing—the whimsical use of territorial and Federal funds to further the power of the Gruening administration, without regard to the welfare of either the individual voter or of the Territory as a whole. It bespeaks only the continuing encroachment on the peoples' rights, so that they may better serve the Governor and his henchmen.

Mr. President, I have read in some detail from the editorial with the idea of giving Members of the Senate a picture of the situation and conditions as they exist in the Territory of Alaska at this time. Members of the Senate may be interested in knowing the results of the election, particularly after the unfreezing of the funds I have referred to before the primary and before the election. Of the 16 Members of the Senate who were elected 8 are Republicans and 8 are Democrats. In the House the election gave the Democrats a majority of three Members. Since the election I have been advised by a prominent citizen of Alaska that the Governor has found it expedient to offer an attractive position to one of the Republican Members of the Senate, in order to enable the Governor, under territorial law, to fill the vacancy thus created by appointing one of his friends. The facts which I have recited give another illustration of the subterfuge and trickery which are not uncommon in the handling of governmental affairs in Alaska.

Mr. President, I have discussed the financial irresponsibility of the Gruening administration in Alaska, which has led to the appropriating of funds which were not in the territorial treasury, and the consequent freezing of all appropriations by the board of administration. Let me mention now how this system of handling funds permitted the Democratic territorial treasurer, Oscar G. Olsen, to embezzle territorial funds over a period of several years.

On August 22, 1950, I inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at pages 13012 to 13014, an address by Territorial Senator John Butrovich, chairman of the Finance Committee of the Territorial Senate, detailing the difficulties he had in securing an audit of the territorial funds handled by the treasurer for the period 1944 through 1948.

In his statement Mr. Butrovich points out that audits of territorial funds in the custody of the treasury were held regularly every 2 years from about 1916 up until 1944. Each biennium, year in and year out, whether the administration and legislature were Democratic or Republican, an audit was held as a matter of course, so as to make sure that the tax money of Alaska residents was secure against theft.

For the biennium of 1945–46, however, no audit was held. I quote briefly from the remarks of Senator Butrovich:

> We get down to the legislative session of 1947, at which time there was plenty said about an audit. Ten days after the session, we did not receive an audit. We were told that there were no funds for an audit, although the business of the Territory had increased a hundredfold. There was still no money for an audit. At that session the legislature appropriated $20,000 for an audit, and we left Juneau feeling that when we came back in 1949 most certainly an audit would be available. The members of the senate—> were very much interested in this audit. After we convened it was just a matter of days until we were discussing the audit on the floor of the senate and we were informed that we had no audit because the funds, $20,000, had been frozen by the board of administration.

I am skipping the nonessential parts—

Mr. Butrovich then recounts how he took the matter up with the Governor and others a number of times, and finally he and the chairman of the ways and means committee of the Territorial house, more or less on their own authority, called in a well-known auditing firm and persuaded the Governor to allow the audit to be made. That audit covered the embezzlement which sent the Territorial treasurer to jail and uncovered over 20 other irregularities in the handling of Territorial finances. The money, the embezzlement of which could be directly traced to the treasurer, was made good by the bonding company. However, there is still some $27,000 in liquor tax stamps lost or unaccounted for, which has not been made good by the bonding company. Those liquor-tax stamps have not yet been found, according to my most recent information, nor has any explanation for their disappearance been made.

The entire episode illustrates the type of government which the people of Alaska have received from the Gruening administration during recent years. During the period when there were insufficient funds on hand for an audit the Territory found $28,000 to carry on the work of the Territorial development board. The Territorial board of administration saved a few dollars by withholding funds for the audit, but opened the door to loss of far greater sums through embezzlement, mishandling of government funds, and other types of loss.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. Would the Senator prefer to conclude his remarks before yielding?

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Nebraska whether he has in his possession figures with reference to the current finances of the administration of the Territorial government in Alaska. Is the Senator in a position to furnish the Senate such figures at this time, or would he prefer to do so at a later time?

Mr. BUTLER. I have not gone into too much detail on the subject in my present brief remarks.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I commend the able Senator from Nebraska for his very fine, enlightening, and able presentation of the facts on the subject, and I well understand that the press of other matters has prevented the Senator from becoming thoroughly familiar with all details.

Mr. BUTLER. If the pending motion is carried I shall make another statement on the subject, at which time I shall debate at some length a great many illustration which are far worse than the ones to which I have referred today.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I am indeed very glad to hear the Senator make the statement. What little contact I have had with the Senator has convinced me that he knows the subject and has a great many details in mind which he will call to the attention of the Senate. I should like to get the figures with reference to the administration of the Territorial government.

Mr. BUTLER. I believe I can obtain the figures for the Senator.

Mr. President, as another example of the sort of government which the people of Alaska have been receiving from their Governor and his friends, let me refer briefly to the so-called Palmer land deal.

On August 16, 1950, I addressed the Senate on the complicated maneuvers undertaken by certain members of the Gruening administration in Alaska, in an effort to secure Federal aid for purchase of land for an airport at Palmer, Alaska, under terms of the Federal Airport Aid Act. My remarks appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD beginning on page 12591.

In that address I charged that a wholly inflated value had been placed on the land to be used for this airport, the purpose of inflating the value being to extract from the Civil Aeronautics Administration the sum of $37,500 to which the Territory was not lawfully entitled. I showed that the entire deal had been engineered by a Stanley McCutcheon, a member of the Governor's clique, who not only arranged the sale but persuaded the sellers to connive with him in setting the false valuation, and also personally prepared the voucher and drew the payment for the land, as a part of the elaborate arrangement. This payment was not devoted to Mr. McCutcheon's personal ends, being paid to the seller, and subsequently returned to the Territorial treasury. However, Mr. McCutcheon also arranged to have himself appointed as attorney for the Territorial aeronautical agency, which made the purchase, and drew a fee of $5,628 from the agency for his services. I might add that Mr. McCutcheon was a member of the legislature which created this agency and voted its funds, is a stockholder of the bank which has financed the construction of a hotel which will be a chief beneficiary of the construction of the airport, and is also president of the Alaska Airlines, which naturally has a pecuniary interest in the airport development. Mr. McCutcheon has so many different financial interests in this one transaction that it is difficult to list them all.

At the time I addressed the Senate about the Palmer land deal I introduced Senate Resolution 331, authorizing the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to undertake an investigation of the entire transaction, with a particular view to determining whether any Federal laws had been violated. In line with the thought of that Senate resolution investigators for that committee have visited Alaska and, I understand, collected considerable evidence bearing on the matter. I have discussed the investigation with the committee staff members. As I understand, the preliminary investigation has not yet been completed, but may be shortly. I am not at liberty to reveal, of course, any of the facts that have been developed, but I believe I am breaking no confidences by saying that the results of that investigation may startle the Senate.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCLELLAN. From the investigation which the able Senator has made with reference to this particular transaction, is he convinced that the present government of Alaska under Governor Gruening is bound to have had knowledge of the circumstances surrounding the transaction?

Mr. BUTLER. I think that in the statement I made, to which I have already referred, the fact was brought out that following my exposé he still insisted that he was in effect the father of the idea, and was very strong for it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I recall the case, and recall the Senator's remarks on the floor of the Senate. I believe I discussed it briefly with him at the time he offered his resolution, which came to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and as chairman of that committee I immediately referred the Senator's resolution to the Subcommittee on Investigations, under the chairmanship of the able senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY]. A tentative investigation did proceed immediately. Of course, I have been away from the Senate during the recess period, and have not made a personal check with reference to how far the tentative investigation has progressed, but I am sure that in the course of this debate we can ascertain how far it has progressed. I am hoping that the able Senator from North Carolina, who is chairman of the subcommittee, will be able, after conferring with the staff members, at least to give us some further information with reference to this scheme, as I interpret it, that was planned to defraud the Government of the United States.

If this transaction was developed and attempted in the manner related by the able Senator from Nebraska, as tentative information supplied to the committee indicates, then I desire to ascertain, if we can, if the present government of Alaska, under Governor Gruening, was cognizant of this action, and condoned it or participated in it. If that is the fact, before we bestow sovereignty on such a government as that, we should stop, look, and listen, and be certain before we proceed into such a danger zone.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very pleased to have the statement of the chairman of the committee which has my resolution in hand. I think I can assure him that the investigation by his committee's staff members will reveal that the Governor, and his associates, also a part of the government clique in the Territory, were fully cognizant of the whole detail, that they fathered it and put it through. It is my opinion that if such facts are reported to the Senate by the chairman of the committee, the President should call for the resignation of a man he appointed who is guilty of such an act, and then appoint someone, preferably a distinguished and capable resident of the Territory, to become the Governor appointee of the Territory.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In view of this development, which has not yet been fully explored, but which can be explored to the extent of determining the actual facts and their implications, would it not be the better part of wisdom on the part of the Senate to defer any action upon the pending bill until full disclosure of this transaction could be made, and the facts could be made known not only to the Senate, but to the people of the United States, with respect to the character of government on which we are now asked to bestow sovereignty?

Mr. BUTLER. I fully covered this matter in my remarks in the former session, and my purpose in going into it again is that the Senate might be freshened on the matter. I think it should be the opinion of all the Members of the Senate that such an important investigation should be made, so that every Member of this body could have the benefit of the disclosures before he was called upon to pass on this question by vote.

I am informed that the final results of that check may be available within a comparatively few days. In the meanwhile, it seems to me it would be foolish for the Senate to proceed with consideration of the Alaska statehood matter, until we at least have the results of this investigation before us. I believe it may well give us a clear insight into the methods of those who desire to convert their Territory into a State, so that they may have even broader powers over its destinies than they now have.

To reassure the Senate, I should mention that the $37,500 of Federal money, which this group of promoters was after, has not yet been paid over by the Civil Aeronautics Administration. I have hopes that that money will be saved for the Federal Treasury.

Mr. President, to give the Senate some further indication of the methods of the Gruening administration in handling the affairs of the people of Alaska, I invite the attention of the Senate to statements made by me on August 23, 1950, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on pages 13186 to 13188, entitled "Use of the Alaska Native Service for Political Purposes," and on August 25, 1950, on pages 13408 and 13409, entitled "Use of Public Money To Influence the Outcome of Elections."

In both of those statements, Mr. President, I clearly demonstrated that the Gruening administration in Alaska has not hesitated to use ruthlessly all the weapons at its command for the purpose of controlling the voters of Alaska and perpetuating its own power there.

In the first statement to which I have referred, I showed that the Alaska Native Service, a Federal Agency, is being boldly used for the purpose of mobilizing the native vote in Alaska in behalf of supporters of the Gruening administration. I inserted in the RECORD actual letters, including one by Governor Gruening himself, discussing all the political angles.

In the statement of August 25 I inserted a letter written by Mr. George Sundborg, Consultant to the Alaska Development Board, an agency of the Territory supported by Territorial funds. That letter represented the most open and blatant attempt to use public moneys to influence votes that I have ever seen—at least, written down on paper and signed. Mr. Sundborg made it very clear in the letter that the city of Nome, Alaska, could expect no help from the Alaska Development Board, because legislators in the territorial legislature had voted against or opposed the Board and its appropriations.

It is by such high-handed tactics as these that the present clique in Alaska endeavors to keep itself in power. This same group now desires statehood in order further to strengthen its hold on the government of Alaska.

Whether such tactics are successful is another question. The election recently held in Alaska gives some indication that the people there cannot be controlled so easily. Of the Territorial senate seats to be filled, six were won by Republicans, only two by Democrats. However, there were six holdover Democrats and only two holdover Republicans, with the result that as I stated a while ago, the Territorial senate is still evenly balanced, 8 to 8.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. It is my understanding that before Mr. Gruening became Governor, at some of the elections voting booths had never been provided for the natives in the country areas, but that he insisted, when he became Governor, that the natives be allowed to vote, that voting booths were set up, and that for the first time the Eskimos and other natives really took part in the elections. Has the distinguished Senator made any investigation into that matter?

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot answer the Senator's question explicitly. I am sure that the Governor himself has done everything he should do as Governor to see that the people have proper voting facilities. I am sure of that. Whether they did have them before or not I do not know.

Mr. LANGER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. In the races for the Territorial house, the Democrats gained 15 seats, the Republicans 9. Although the Democrats retained control, their margin is sharply reduced from what it was in the last legislature, when they held a majority of 19 to 5. The Democrats now have three majority in the house and five in the senate. Even more significant, however, was the wholesale defeat of leading Gruening supporters. That election gave a strong indication that the people of Alaska have had enough of the type of government they have been living under for the past few years.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] calls my attention to the fact that the membership in the senate is a tie, eight Democrats and eight Republicans. In the house I believe there is a majority of three Democrats.

The feeling that the people of Alaska have "had enough" of the type of government under which they have been living for the past few years is not confined to Republicans alone. Leading Democrats share it. Their reaction is typified by a statement made shortly after the election by Howard Lyng, Territorial senator and Democratic national committeeman. His remarks are contained in a news clipping which I have taken from the Ketchikan Daily News of October 16, 1950, which I shall read.

I remind Senators that the election in Alaska occurs on October 10, about a month before the elections in the continental area. The article reads:

DEMOCRATS REPUDIATE GRUENING—LYNG SAYS GRUENING POLITICS RESPONSIBLE FOR GAINS OF THE GOP

JUNEAU.—Interpreting the results of the Territorial elections held on Tuesday, October 10, as "a registered protest of a majority of Alaska's voters against the manner in which the head of the present administration, federally appointed Governor Gruening, has been conducting the affairs of the Territory in recent years," Howard Lyng, Territorial senator, and Democratic national Committeeman, in a signed statement yesterday, bitterly denounced Gruening's interference in Alaskan politics.

ANALYZES ELECTION

Lyng made the statement to Elmer Friend, editor of the Juneau Empire, after receiving the latest tabulation on election returns before boarding a plane for Seattle on a business trip. The statement reads as follows:

"I do not regard the Republican gains in the general election as a defeat for the Democratic Party—it is rather a protest of the majority of Alaska's voters against the manner in which the head of the present administration, federally appointed Governor Gruening, has been conducting the affairs of the Territory in recent years."

DEMOS LOSE

"Democrats, Republicans, and independent voters all participated in the vigorous Territory-wide rebuke. In this election Democrats, holding six of eight holdover senate seats from the 1948 general election, secured but two out of eight senate seats in the general election this year, six going to the Republicans.

"In the house, with 24 seats filled every 2 years, Republicans captured 10 and the Democrats 14. This is a loss of 5 from the 19 seats held by the Democrats in the 1949 session."

"PROTEST VOTE"

"The result of this election, in my opinion, is a mandate from the voters to restore the two-party system and once and for all rid ourselves of pro-Gruening, anti-Gruening basis on which our elections of recent years have been conducted."

DENOUNCES GRUENING

"The Democratic Party in Alaska, for which I am the major spokesman, sincerely hopes in elections 2 years hence it will be able to properly conduct its own affairs without any outside interference or attempted domination on the part of any federally appointed officials."

GRUENING SUPPORTERS ARE DEFEATED

The signed statement made by Lyng as official spokesman for the Democratic Party gives confirmation to the recurrent rumors that the party was withdrawing from Gruening control and the large majority piled up by Democrat James Nolan, running for the senate in the first division against Gruening opposition, emphasized the fact that voters would no longer follow Gruening dictates.

This was further emphasized by the defeat of Victor Rivers, chairman of the Democratic Territorial committee, and M. Lousac, finance chairman for the Democratic Party, both of whom ran for senate seats in the third division. In the fourth division Democratic national committeewoman, Essie Dale, who was seeking a house seat, was soundly defeated. These candidates were all known as strong Gruening supporters and their defeats at the hands of the voters was interpreted as a protest against the Governor.

Mr. President, I mentioned previously the strenuous efforts of the Gruening administration in Alaska to control the native vote, as a means of perpetuating its own power. I pointed to the matter in which public funds, and in fact Federal funds, have been used for this purpose.

A preliminary check of the voting returns in the Alaska election indicates strongly to me that this effort to control the votes of the natives may have been successful. First returns from the Alaska elections indicated that the Territorial house would be split evenly, 12 Democrats and 12 Republicans. All the Alaska newspapers I have seen, representing various shades of opinion, were inclined to concede, on the basis of these early returns, that the Republicans had pulled up to a position of full equality with the Democrats in the house.

That was on the basis of the early returns, which expressed the views of the city residents, and those of the more populated areas. The natives generally live far from civilization or communications, and the returns from their precincts were slow in coming in. As those returns came in, one after another of the apparent Republican winners was defeated by overwhelmingly Democratic slant of these late precincts. It was apparent that the native vote in some areas was cast almost 100 percent for the Gruening candidates. Finally, three of the apparent Republican victors were defeated and replaced by three Democrats in the races for the house.

One of my correspondents has expressed it in these words in a letter written about 2 weeks after the election:

> The only thing that saved Gruening from a smashing defeat on all sides was the native vote, unsupervised and unobserved. The administration delivers the vote from those precincts exactly the same as the crooked vote is delivered from the machine precincts in the big metropolitan areas. After watching this thing at close range through two elections up here, I'm convinced that the only way decency and honesty will be brought back to Territorial affairs is through smashing the administration's control of the native vote. And I think the only way that can be done is through Congress.

Later on he says:

> On the face of the returns, just plain lopsided totals in favor of the administration's hand-picked candidates, you know it is wrong.

Mr. President, those sponsoring this legislation have attempted to give the impression that Alaska is a rapidly growing developing area where new people, new blood, and presumably additional investment, are causing an increase in wealth and population by leaps and bounds. I believe that picture is totally deceptive and misleading. What are the facts?

For a number of decades, the two great industries of the Territory on which the livelihood of most of the people depends have been mining and fisheries. These two industries have provided the overwhelming majority of the wealth produced, the tax revenues, and the shipments out of the Territory.

The gold-mining industry in Alaska has almost totally collapsed. Production of gold during the last 8 years has declined almost 75 percent.

The salmon fisheries are no longer growing but declining. Production of canned salmon during the 5-year period 1945–49, fell to the lowest levels of any 5-year period since 1910–14. And the production of canned salmon fell still further during 1950.

What other industries are there? Farming in Alaska does not amount to much. There are only a few hundred farms, and much of the food for Alaska must be brought in from the United States. Many of us in the past have been optimistic about the development of timber and pulp resources. You may recall, Mr. President, that a few years ago I was very active in securing legislation so that the timber of the Tongass National Forest might be leased for private exploitation. That legislation was passed and negotiations have been carried on for several years designed to induce private investment in the manufacture of pulp, but to date, construction has not yet begun on a single pulp mill. The tourist industry brings in a few hundred tourists each year. That is all.

What are the people of Alaska to live on if statehood is granted? What industries are to carry the sudden sharp increase in the tax load? Existing industries are already being taxed out of existence. They are carrying all of the burden that they can. Some of them are moving out; new venture capital is not moving in.

One part of the rosy picture about Alaska's prospects under statehood is true—only one. The population has increased, but the increase is not due to development of additional resources or to the production of new wealth. It is due solely to the increase in Federal spending and Federal jobs in the Territory. The gigantic expenditures of the Federal Government particularly for new defense installations, are solely responsible for the increased population. These expenditures must come to a halt some day. When they do, there is a danger that the population of Alaska will slump back to its prewar figure. It is not possible to build a stable prosperity on the basis of temporary Government expenditures. Permanent wealth-producing industries are the only sound basis for Alaska's development, but during the past decade, these industries have declined instead of growing. They could not begin to support the people of Alaska if the military spending should come to an end.

In order to give a notion of the tremendous scope of our construction program in Alaska, I shall read a short news article, entitled "Heavy Dollars for Alaskan Defenses," which I clipped from the Washington Daily News for November 6, 1950:

HEAVY DOLLARS FOR ALASKAN DEFENSES

(By James Helbert)

Alaskan military posts got preferred treatment today in new military construction projects.

This was revealed by the Army engineers in a list of 210 projects to cost $209,000,000. Almost two-thirds of that amount will be spent in Alaska. These are the first projects of this sort for this fiscal year and more are to come.

Choice of Alaska for most of the spending was considered significant in military circles here.

Since the start of the cold war, military experts have pounded on the theme that in case this country is attacked, the aggressors would first hit Alaska.

WEAK SPOT

Our defenses there have been called so weak that "a well-organized Boy Scout troop could capture Alaska."

Today's building plans, however, show that the Army and Air Force will expand facilities considerably in the Far North and that many permanent installations will be strengthened.

For instance, Eiesen Air Force Base in Alaska is to get $2,800,000 for petroleum storage, $1,250,000 for repair shops, $300,000 for an ordnance shop, and $350,000 for an ammunition storage project.

In the works for Ladd Air Force are a $1,275,000 maintenance shop, $520,000 artillery shop, and $300,000 warehouse.

Plans for Fort Richardson show $12,000,000 for a heat and power plant, $5,000,000 for utilities, $2,600,000 for indoor training facilities, a $2,500,000 water supply project, and $1,500,000 for oil.

RADAR SET?

Also listed is a $7,000,000 communication system at Kenai, Alaska. That may be a radar air raid warning system.

Much criticism has been made of the lack of living quarters at Alaskan posts. But the Enginer Corps plans include many additional housing units and other facilities to make life more bearable in the subzero North.

Projects at Eiesen include $3,500,000 family quarters, $2,931,000 barracks, and an $800,000 gymnasium.

Fort Richardson will get $4,000,000 for family quarters, $2,000,000 for a laundry and cleaning plant, a $300,000 service club, and $700,000 for theaters.

Planned for Ladd Field are barracks costing $5,000,000, $1,600,000 family quarters, and a $135,000 PX.

Mr. President, I have directed, in what I think is a practical way, the attention of the Senate to some of the facts. I have not tried to appeal to anyone's emotions. I do not intend to do so. But I will say that I know too well the people of Hawaii and Alaska to think that they are on the bargain counter trying to force statehood recognition at this time because of the international situation. They are brave people. They will give proof of their loyalty just as the people of any continental State will give proof of their loyalty, should that be required.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I wish to commend the able Senator from Nebraska for his sound and logical presentation of this issue. I think we should undertake to decide it on the basis of the facts, not on the basis of any emotional considerations.

The Senator barely touched upon something which I think is a very important factor in connection with arriving at the correct decision, namely, that by means of this measure, if it is enacted, we would bestow State sovereignty upon Alaska. With that bestowal of course would go certain privileges and rights which she could enjoy as a State, but which she does not now enjoy. I should like to ask whether Alaska is capable of assuming those obligations.

Mr. BUTLER. In the course of my remarks, I made several statements to the effect that it would be a physical impossibility for the Territory of Alaska, if it became a State, to assume or to meet the financial responsibilities of statehood, which would be approximately double what they are to Alaska as a Territory.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I was interested in several other statements made by the Senator.

I understood him to say that at a time approximately 50 years ago—in 1900, I believe he said—the population of Alaska was approximately one and one-half million.

Mr. BUTLER. No; that was the population of California 50 years following the discovery of gold. Fifty years following the time when gold was discovered in California, the population of California had increased to one and one-half million, whereas following the discovery of gold in Alaska the population of Alaska increased very little. That was the reference I made.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Does the Senator have in mind the increase in the population of Alaska during the past 50 years?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not have that figure in mind. I am sure it is included in some of the statements I have previously inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Today the population of Alaska is approximately 100,000, as I have said in the course of my remarks today. Opinion varies a little as to whether one-third or one-half of those 100,000 are Federal employees or those dependent upon Federal jobs. I think the correct figure is fully one-half.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have not fully checked the figures, but I was surprised when I thought I understood the Senator to say that Alaska has a population of one and one-half million. I thought that was not the correct figure.

If Alaska is not able to assume the financial obligations of statehood, but if statehood is granted to Alaska, will not that necessarily result in increasing the financial obligations of the United States, in order to support Alaska?

Mr. BUTLER. That certainly will be the case.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In this time of world crisis, when we are required to make extraordinary and unusual expenditures, and are compelled to raise the taxes of the American people to the highest level ever known in the history of our Nation, and when even with all these efforts we probably shall have to continue with heavy deficit spending, and in view of the uncertainties which confront us as to the obligations we may yet have to incur, is it not definitely unwise now for us to undertake to take into the Union, as a sovereign State, a Territory which is not yet sufficiently developed economically to be able to bear her part of the burden or at least meet the normal obligations which statehood would impose?

Mr. BUTLER. I may say to the Senator that I am quite positive conditions in our country are such that it is going to be absolutely necessary to avoid the expenditure of every dollar and, indeed, every cent that it is not really necessary for us to spend, in order that we shall be able to meet our international obligations. Therefore, all domestic expenditures undoubtedly will have to be, or at least should be, cut to the bone.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I believe I understood the able Senator to say, in the course of his remarks, that only three-tenths of 1 percent of the area of Alaska has, up to the present time, been surveyed.

Mr. BUTLER. No; three-tenths of 1 percent of the area of Alaska is private property, privately owned.

Mr. McCLELLAN. What percentage of the area of Alaska did the Senator say is still unsurveyed?

Mr. BUTLER. The part which is surveyed is approximately 2,000,000 acres, which is seven-tenths of 1 percent of the 365,000,000 acres.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I see that I got the figures reversed. I understand now that the Senator has said that seven-tenths of 1 percent of the area of Alaska has been surveyed; is that correct?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. And only three-tenths of 1 percent of the area of Alaska is privately owned; is that true?

Mr. BUTLER. That is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yet this measure would make that vast unexplored area a State of the Union, with the full benefits and privileges of statehood, and at a time when it has not been sufficiently developed to be capable of self-support and to be self-sustaining.

Mr. BUTLER. That is true.

Mr. President, in closing, I should like to say that my opinion of the people of Alaska and of the people of Hawaii is that they would not be materially better off, so far as physical existence is concerned, if statehood were granted to them. I know they would like to vote for President and would like to send a Representative and two Senators to the United States Congress. That would be fine; and the time may come—I hope it will—when that arrangement can be made.

However, it would be dangerous to consider making it under present conditions, because of the influence of Harry Bridges in the Hawaiian Islands; and he now has his men working in all of the fishery towns of Alaska, trying to put under his thumb every union in Alaska that in any way is connected with fishing or with shipping. Already he is having some difficulty, which is greatly to the credit of the people of Alaska, because he has not been too successful in his enterprise.

Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an editorial entitled, "Alaska at Mercy of Absentee Unions." The editorial was published in the Ketchikan Daily News, and was reprinted from the Alaska Sportsman.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALASKA AT MERCY OF ABSENTEE UNIONS

It seems strange in a free country that the economic fate of a huge Territory such as Alaska could be in the grip of two absentee Communist-dominated organizations which are able to dictate to Alaskans and defy the United States Government.

Both of these organizations are monopolies in the truest sense of the word—monopolies protected as such by the laws of the country and headed by dictators, one of whom has been convicted of perjury by a jury in a United States court. Both of the organizations have been expelled from the CIO, after 8-month-long investigations, as unworthy of being associated with other labor unions because they are Communist-controlled.

So strong are they—the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union and the Marine Cooks and Stewards—that Alaska's Delegate to Congress and its Governor, as well as other governmental officials who are quick to condemn business organizations, dare not speak out against the high-handed action of these two unions.

The longshore union has tied up shipping to Alaska many times for weeks and months at a time. The marine cooks and stewards in October defied the Government to enforce its loyalty-screening program, refused to abide by its provisions, and caused a suspension of American passenger service to Alaska. The longshoremen sided with them.

The 3-month-long strike of the ILWU in 1948 caused the death of two American steamship lines serving Alaska, leaving the Alaska Steamship Co. alone in the field, maritime troubles in past years having also caused the discontinuance of all other intercoastal passenger service on the Pacific coast. With the suspension of the Alaska Steamship Co.'s passenger transportation, the last of this kind of service ceased. This also reduced freight service, because passenger vessels also carried some freight.

There can be no reasonable explanation of the action of the marine cooks and stewards other than the obvious one that their Communist-inspired leaders have no interest in the speedy building of the military defenses of Alaska or in the successful pursuit of the war against the Communists in Korea. The screening program was put into effect to prevent the sabotage of these two objectives.

When United States Congressman HUGH B. MITCHELL, of the Committee on Education and Labor, called a hearing in Seattle to investigate the refusal of the marine cooks and stewards to be screened, the union declined to attend. At the hearing were Gov. Ernest Gruening, of Alaska; Mayor William Devin, of Seattle; and representatives of the Alaska Steamship Co., the United States Coast Guard, and the merchant marine. The marine cooks and stewards, in effect, thumbed their noses at them.

A tie-up of shipping would not be so serious anywhere in the States as it is to Alaska. Alaskans must depend on steamer service for the bulk of their goods, and when shipping is tied up it commences to strangle the economic life of the Territory. Costs go up because expensive alternate means of transportation, such as airplanes and the Alaska Highway, must be used. Construction is delayed and business cannot be carried on in a normal way.

The sad part of the whole mess is that most of the members of the two unions are loyal Americans. But they are also loyal—too loyal—to their aggressive leaders. They are loyal to their leaders because these leaders tell them that the employers are their enemies and that big business is to blame for all the workers' troubles. For proof of this a person has only to read their union papers.

Unions are necessary and can do a great deal to benefit their members, but when they act as these two unions have acted they give a black eye or worse to all union men and lay the free United States of America wide open to disaster for lack of a dependable merchant marine.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, again I should like to say that there is no similar area in the world which has made the progress which Hawaii has made during the 50 years she has been a part of the United States. No other similar area in the world has achieved progress which is comparable with the progress of Hawaii.

However, as regards the granting of statehood to Hawaii, I believe it is perfectly reasonable for us to bide our time. We are not doing any permanent injustice to those good people if we postpone action on such an important matter, action which will be irrevocable when we take it. Let us take that step at a time when our minds are not cluttered up with all the international mess we have at the present time.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I did not hear all the Senator's remarks, but at one point he spoke of the improvements we are making in our military establishments in Alaska.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Is it not true that in the next Congress very substantial demands will be made for increased expenditures of a capital character for military security purposes in Alaska, expenditures running up into several hundred million dollars?

Mr. BUTLER. I am not a member of the Armed Services Committee or of the Appropriations Committee, but I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts is correct in the statement that a tremendous sum will be requested. Undoubtedly that will happen.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. So even if the status of Alaska is changed, the main purport of our effort in Alaska in the next year or two, as the Senator has so well pointed out, must be for security purposes. Is that correct?

Mr. BUTLER. That is correct—for the best interests of the people of Alaska and the people of Hawaii, as well as of ourselves.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I am trying to confine my remarks to Alaska.

The Senator from Nebraska has mentioned the tax question. He has said that the expenses would double if Alaska became a State. Is it not true that the present system of taxation in Alaska is balancing the Territorial budget? Does the Senator from Nebraska know that to be true?

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. By the answer "No," does the Senator mean that the present system of taxation is not balancing the Territorial budget?

Mr. BUTLER. The budget has not been balanced. They have appropriated large sums of money which they did not have. They enacted a number of tax laws, thinking they were going to raise a good part of the money which they were appropriating. I think that, without exception, those laws have been declared unconstitutional by their local court.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Of the various municipalities in Alaska, such as Ketchikan, Nome, Anchorage, Fairbanks, and others, how many are self-supporting, if the Senator knows?

Mr. BUTLER. I am very confident that Nome, Fairbanks, Anchorage, Juneau, Ketchikan, and perhaps several other cities and towns are self-supporting in respect to municipal expenditures.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. But they are unable, are they not, to contribute, as we do, by way of real-estate taxes to be used in defraying the expenses of management of the Territory?

Mr. BUTLER. Their expenditures are modest as compared to those of communities in the continental United States.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator also mentioned the votes cast in Alaska in the election of members of the senate and house of the Territorial legislature, and so forth. Does the Senator know what proportion of the citizens who are entitled to vote, actually register and vote?

Mr. BUTLER. I may say to the Senator that that is one point I wanted to develop today, but on which I was unable to obtain from Alaska confirmation of the information I have at hand. I expect to have confirmation within a few days, and I shall then place the information in the RECORD. I also want to know how many votes were cast in the most recent election on the question of statehood for Alaska, which I understand was about 2 or 3 years ago. They were not voting on a particular bill such as we now have under consideration in the Senate, proposing statehood, but merely upon the question, "Do you favor or are you opposed to statehood?" Approximately 16,000 votes were cast, 9,000 for statehood, 7,000 against.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. It will be very interesting to me, if the Senator is able to supply those figures, because of my recent visit to Alaska.

Mr. BUTLER. My present information indicates that if the vote were taken today, it would be more nearly even than it was 3 years ago.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I did not have that in mind so much as to try to bring out, or to request the Senator to bring out the number of people who were actually interested enough to take part in current elections, which I think would be important in determining the interest of the people, as to whether they would take part in their State government.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank the Senator for his questions.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Brewster	Green	Russell

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I desire to express my own appreciation and what I also feel is the appreciation of the membership of the Senate for the very fine factual and logical presentation of the subject of statehood for Alaska made by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. President, I feel that this is a subject about which the hard facts have not come to the personal knowledge and attention of the membership of the Senate. In my judgment, when the facts are fully brought before the Senate and when the membership has had time to analyze the situation, there will be no doubt about the outcome of the vote on this bill on the merits.

For illustration, we have the shocking fact—and it is a shocking fact—that of all the great area of Alaska, which is as large as the combined areas of Texas, California, and Montana, our three largest States, and embraces more than 500,000 square miles, the Government owns 99.7 percent. In other words, in the 83 years Alaska has been under the control of the Federal Government, only three-tenths of 1 percent of all that vast area has found its way into private hands. As I say, that is a shocking fact when it is connected with the proposal that that area shall have two Members in the United States Senate. The figures as to the area are taken from what I call the Butler report, the report of the committee. I am sure the figures are accurate. Three-tenths of 1 percent of those 500,000 square miles is equivalent to only 1,500 square miles of that vast domain, and that is all of that which is owned privately, either by corporations or by individuals. That is just about the size of one good county in Minnesota or of two counties in Mississippi. Yet it is proposed that those 1,500 square miles in Alaska shall be represented by two Members of this great body.

There is some difference of opinion in regard to the population of Alaska; the figures vary. My best information is that the present population of Alaska is approximately 120,000, and that approximately 12,000 Federal employees are included in that group. When the members of their families are included the 12,000 Federal employees account for approximately 25,000 or 30,000 persons. Furthermore, approximately 30,000 of the population are natives—Indians or Eskimos.

However, the shocking fact is that this small area which is privately owned is actually seriously proposed to be given two seats on the floor of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. President, a few minutes ago I read the newspaper headlines, which state that Red Chinese troops are pouring through the United Nations' line in Korea. Other headlines state that five divisions of our own forces are about to be surrounded. I also read in the press about the great need for further tax bills to be passed by the Congress, and I read about the distressing situation, as alleged, in regard to rent control in some of our great cities. I think about a host of other things, such as the great, far-reaching foreign policies, which a great many persons believe certainly are unsettled and need the attention of the Congress; and I think about what is on the minds of the 150,000,000 people throughout our own great land. Let us consider what our own people are thinking about, before we consider what the people of Asia are thinking about. I know what the people of Mississippi are thinking about, because I have been among them recently. They are thinking about this war and what it is going to mean to their boys to have to fight in it; and that is what I am thinking about.

With all those problems and disturbing conditions confronting us, and coming down upon us and upon all our people like heavy clouds, instead of being here manfully trying to wrestle with those problems, we are taking up our time trying to pass a statehood bill for Alaska.

Mr. President, I did not ask for the quorum call, but I am going to ask for order, if I may do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. STENNIS. As I have said, we are surrounded by most serious conditions, including war conditions, and we are at war; and we are confronted by urgent, demanding domestic problems, including far-reaching problems of fiscal affairs and taxation. Those are the problems with which we are supposed to be concerning ourselves as we return here.

However, instead of that, there is actually put on top of the priority list a proposal for statehood for two Territories, and we are told that the most important idea is that these statehood bills must be passed regardless. I hold in my hand a quotation from a message to Congress by the President of the United States. I do not refer to him in personal criticism at all; but in his own words he says that these Territories "are also the proving grounds of our domestic institutions in the Pacific area, with tremendous psychological influence on the hearts and minds of the people of Asia and the Pacific islands."

Mr. President, I am here to say that what we need to be wrestling with are things that are on the hearts and minds of the people of the United States of America. the things they are concerned about and the problems they are facing with reference to our foreign policy and with reference to the war and the progress of the war.

I am not saying this in criticism of General MacArthur; but merely to show the seriousness of the situation and how much in the dark he is. I point out that only last Friday he was talking about having the boys return home by Christmas, but last night he had to say that he must have further instructions, that a new situation has arisen, and that the war has taken a new and a very difficult turn.

Those things emphasize to my mind and, I think, to the mind of the American people, that what we who are here ought to be doing is wrestling with some kind of attempted solutions of our own problems.

I think it is the farthest reach of someone's imagination to say to us that the admission of Alaska as a State of the Union has a bearing on our military progress, or our military problems, or how we are going to solve them. That is merely a figment of someone's imagination.

Alaska is now a Territory, and the American flag flies over it today, and we have control of it. Can anyone bring forward a real, tangible reason, with facts to support it, as to how it would better our position to have Alaska become a State? I am speaking of the situation from a military standpoint. Can anyone suggest some tangible, real reason? I see the Senator from Georgia on his feet. If he has something in mind in connection with the question I have just asked, I shall be glad to let him present it now.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I did not desire to present a reason, because I am in accord with the argument the distinguished Senator from Mississippi is making.

However, I should like to ask the Senator if this is not the very worst time we could undertake to transfer the powers of the government from a national sovereignty to a new, untried State government. Some persons say that Alaska is a vital outpost of the United States. It is now under the control of the United States as a Territory, and the Federal Government has the powers there. At this very moment, when we are told that we are in danger of attack in Alaska, it is proposed to strip the Federal Government of its powers there, to uproot all the established institutions of government in the Territory of Alaska, and to establish a new, untried State government, which could not function efficiently at the very outset; that would be beyond the realm of human possibilities.

If there ever has been a time when, from the military standpoint, we should not transfer the powers of the government in Alaska, it is in this hour of great danger to our Nation and its people.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the very fine contribution the Senator from Georgia has made.

I am not an expert on this subject; but for months I have looked for real, tangible reasons why the granting of statehood to Alaska would strengthen our defenses there or why it would strengthen us in war. After getting the facts about the area and the people of Alaska, instead of finding anything in favor of statehood for Alaska, I think the Senator from Georgia is eminently correct when he says that the granting of statehood to Alaska at this time would weaken our chances of preparing for an effective defense to meet, not an imaginary condition, but conditions which now actually confront us and which we see reflected in the headlines of the newspapers which are displayed on the tables in the passageway in the rear of the rostrum in this Chamber.

The point is well made that to transfer the governmental powers in Alaska now and to set up a new regime and a new form of government there would bring up new problems, whose answers we could not anticipate, and neither could the people of Alaska.

We are told that strength in Alaska is a vital consideration. Mr. President, if we wish to develop strength there, we had better keep our control there just as we have it now. Certainly we should do so during this military emergency.

Except for the general statement by the President of the United States, made to the Congress yesterday, that the granting of statehood to Alaska would greatly increase our military powers, and a general statement made by ex-Secretary of Defense Johnson, when he appeared before the committee, I have not found any military officer or any military person who has made a statement in favor of this proposal.

On the other hand, the views of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], as he has presented them to us, reflect a statement made to the committee, at its hearings, by Rear Adm. Ralph Wood, retired. That statement appears on pages 369, 370, and 371 of the committee hearings. I quote a portion of it:

> It has been stated that statehood for Alaska is now going to bolster somehow the national defense.
> In my opinion, it makes no difference whether Alaska is a state or a territory, as far as national defense is concerned.

That is a general statement which was made several months ago. But under the immediate conditions and urgencies of the present occasion, I submit to the Senate that passage of this bill would merely complicate our problem of national defense in Korea.

An argument was made in the Senate this morning by my very esteemed friend from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], whom I appreciate greatly for his very fine ability and his splendid presentation of any subject to which he addresses himself. But he actually argued that we are going to be judged now by the people of the Orient upon the basis of the way we vote on these bills. He was referring to the bills providing statehood for Alaska and for Hawaii. He further said that we must prove to the people of the world that we are not aggressors, that we are not imperialists. Does anyone seriously think that even if we were to pass these bills, Russia or her propagandists would change their tune? If it were in order, I should like to ask for a show of hands in answer to that question, but it is not in order. In my opinion, however, no one thinks they are going to change their tune, regardless of what we do regarding these bills.

Anyone, either an Asiatic or anyone else, who is looking for facts, should be asked, "What about our attitude toward the Philippines?" We recently granted them full and complete independence. Anyone who is looking for facts to offset imperialist charges can find an abundance of facts. There is not a scintilla of evidence in the history we have ever written to support any contention that we have shown a spirit of territorial aggression. The actual fact is, with reference to Cuba, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, Alaska, the Philippines, Guam, or any other area we have ever touched, that there is not a scintilla of proof of imperialism or of any kind of design except that of helping them. So the suggestion that in order to avoid the withering fire of the Russian propagandists or the condemnation of someone in the Orient we must vote for these two statehood bills simply does not hold water. It does not have the substance of logic behind it, as I view it.

Mr. President, I am not a member of the committee which reported the statehood bills. I do not have the advantage of having attended the hearings, and I do not have the advantage of having visited Alaska. I cannot give the Senate the benefit of anything which could have been gained by me through those processes. I have thought about this matter strictly from the standpoint of constitutional government. I have been selfish about it. I have been thinking about what it means to us and what it means to our people. We shall think about Hawaii, Alaska, and other areas in due time. But I think those matters are incidental. The main thing is, what, in view of present dangers, is best and what is soundest for the United States and for the people of the Nation?

In the beginning, I desire to point out that the historical precedents with reference to admitting Territories into the Union are long since out of date, because we are facing new conditions, new times, and a new era. We are facing a new monumental fact, namely, that we are the one Nation left in the world which has the money, the manpower, and the resources really to cope and deal with any world-wide aggressor, be it Russia or any other country. I think the big thing is to keep ourselves strong at home. I do not believe we can strengthen the American Union by bringing into it additional States. I do not believe it can be done in that way. Perhaps at some future time that might be possible, but I am convinced in my own mind that the main thing for us to do is to keep as strong as we can, and we weaken ourselves as States within the United States by admitting outside areas into the Union.

For the first time, the Senate of the United States is face to face with the proposition of taking action on the question of admitting as a State within the United States an area which is geographically unconnected with the mainland. No other United States Senate has ever had to face that problem. Many Territories have been taken in as States. California was admitted while certain intervening areas were still constituted as Territories. But this is the first time the Senate of the United States has ever stood face to face with the proposition of admitting as States of the Union areas which are unconnected with the present States. That is a far-reaching question, a most searching one. We are now considering that question in connection with Alaska. I shall not argue the Hawaiian question at this time, except incidentally. But while we are considering Alaska, we had just as well consider Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and all the other areas which can at some later time—and soon—knock at the door, with the same logic, with almost the same facts, and with almost the same arguments. We had just as well consider now what we are going to do about those situations, because we are blazing a new trail.

I think, Mr. President, that the most significant fact connected with this whole question that any Territory which may be granted statehood will have two votes on the floor of the Senate, the only remaining major deliberative body in the world. The reasoning will come back to that hard fact every time. In my opinion that is one reason why some of those who are interested as proponents of the statehood bills are now pressing for their passage. That is the big prize. It is not so much a matter of local government. We know that even now the Territories can have all the local government they want, under the control of the Congress. It is not so much a matter of being able to vote for the President of the United States. That is a valuable privilege, it is true, but that is not the controlling consideration. The big factor in this whole question is the desire to fill four seats on the floor of the United States Senate. I do not blame those who want to do that. I think that statehood within the American Union represents the pinnacle of perfection in the political realm, not only for the present time, but for all times. I commend the people within the Territories for aspiring to it. But let us not fool ourselves; the big prize is membership on the floor of the Senate of the United States. As I have said, the Senate is the last major legislative body left in the world that has the privilege of debate and unlimited discussion. That is the prize that is sought and that is what we are about to surrender.

In our minds, there is no distinction among States. The question as to how many Senators a State should have was decided by the Constitutional Convention, and of course we have adhered to that law. But it has not been decided as to what particular areas shall be admitted as States. It is beside the question to say that that matter has been decided by the Constitutional Convention. The question is, what areas shall come in as States? That is the decision we must make. When once admitted, the Constitution automatically determines the number of Senators a new State shall have, of course. But the question still for us to decide is: Will the Union be strengthened by adding any new areas to it as States within the United States?

I respectfully submit we would not only fail to strengthen ourselves, but would weaken ourselves by such a course. It would dilute the voting strength of every State now represented in the Senate, and of every Senator. I think it would have a detrimental effect on our consideration of world affairs, as I think they are going to develop. I believe it would seriously affect the soundness of our great Union. I would look with disfavor upon the admission as States of any areas, especially in the Pacific or in the Orient, whose independence might be threatened. There are many fine people in the Territories, but we see the trend today. Who is going to stop the trend? Can we alone stop it? We are not receiving any too much help toward that end today; and we have got to stop it in Europe, if we can. We are getting on dangerous ground when we reach far into the Orient to take in areas as States within the United States.

I have collected here a few figures which may throw some light on the problem. We hear about the glowing vote this proposal received in the House of Representatives. I am sure the President is misinformed as to that. In his statement of yesterday he said that the people of Alaska voted for statehood 3 to 1. The President is misinformed on that. The vote, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] gave it, in round numbers, was 9,000 to 6,000—about 9,300 for, and about 6,400 against, as I remember the figures. Anyway, it was roughly 3 to 2.

The vote in the House of Representatives, which is a fairly recent one, on this very bill was 186 in favor of its passage, 146 opposed, with 100 not voting. So, after all, although much is said about the overwhelming vote, the vote wound up in the House of Representatives with a minority of the total membership voting in favor of passage of the bill. There were 186 affirmative votes, 146 negative votes, and 100 Members did not vote. Therefore, on a percentage basis, I should not call that a strong vote in favor of the bill. I have no explanation of why 6,400 persons in Alaska voted against statehood. I do not know enough about the picture in Alaska to be able to say. Certainly such a vote does not reflect unanimity. As the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] has said, a vote taken today in Alaska would be approximately evenly divided. It is speculative, of course, but the actual figures show a ratio of 3 to 2.

Mr. President, I should like to go back to the question of land. Only 1,500 square miles in the whole Territory of Alaska are privately owned. The argument is made that vast areas of the land would be developed if the Territory were given the status of a State within the United States. I have never understood why such a thing would happen, and I do not know why the argument is made. However, assuming for the sake of argument that there would be a trend in that direction, we find that 20,000,000 of the best acres of forest land are excepted from the operation of the bill. The Government would continue to own that forest land. I do not object to that. I think it is a very good idea for the Government to continue to own that land. We are not faced with a scarcity of land or timber. I like the idea of the Government's keeping some of the timber reserves. We have some timber reserves in Mississippi, which the Government bought during the depression. I know that the National Forest Service is doing wonderful work, not only in the growing of timber, but in the example it is setting through its operations. Mr. President, I am not complaining about land being withheld. However, the land so withheld would not be subject to so-called great development which has been referred to. The Government would also withhold 50,000,000 acres of land for gas and oil development. I understand such land to be the best and most valuable in the Territory. In other words, the best land would be withheld by the United States and would not be subject to prospective development. I am not complaining about the fact that the land would be retained by the Government. I merely state the fact that it would be withheld from prospective development.

Mention has been made of the population of Alaska. Mr. President, only the gold rush and the Government's programs have caused the population of Alaska to increase. As a result of the gold rush the population did creep up somewhat. In 1890 the population was 30,000. In 1900 it was 60,000. The increase is reflected by the gold rush, which took place in the interim. Actually the population declined between 1900 and 1930, a period of 30 years. The only growth in population has been due to the gold rush and the Government's programs. Generally speaking, the policy of the people who have gone to Alaska has been to get all they could and then get out.

Such a situation is not due to lack of law or the fact that the people in Alaska cannot vote for the President of the United States. Neither is it due to the fact that the flag of the United States is not now flying over the country, for it is flying there. It is due to the extreme climate and the hazardous living conditions. Congress cannot change the climate. At least not yet. The basic factors which have been holding back the development of Alaska are ones which we cannot change. Perhaps some development of the area would be encouraged by the granting of statehood. However, it is my belief that the Government would finance most of the encouragement. I base my belief on past and prospective programs of the Government. I believe that we would be called on to finance more and more projects for the development of Alaska. It would be difficult not to yield to the arguments of the Senators from Alaska in their strong pleas in behalf of Alaska. I believe we would be faced with such a trend.

I have before me some figures on that subject. In the fiscal year just ended we spent in Alaska $71,000,000. I cannot vouch for the absolute accuracy of the figure, but I believe it is substantially correct. In the fiscal year 1951 we shall spend approximately $112,000,000. These figures do not include the great sums of money which are being spent for military purposes. The figures do not include any prospective programs of development which we would be called upon to finance if Alaska were to become a State. As of December 31, 1948, the Government had 11,536 employees in Alaska. I cannot vouch for the accuracy of that figure, but I think it is accurate. I believe the number of Government employees has increased since then. 1948 was the last year for which I was able to obtain figures.

Income from gold mining in Alaska was $28,000,000 in 1941. By 1949 it had dropped to $8,000,000. I cite these figures to show that gold mining is a rapidly declining industry. The industry has been practically exhausted. So far as aiding a new government to be created to furnish a livelihood to Alaskans to develop new areas, and to bring in new citizens, gold mining is a declining industry. According to gross income figures the industry is running on flat tires.

I cannot shed very much light on the subject, but I understand that, because of high transportation costs and increased cost of labor, the timber and pulp industry is on the decline. I am sorry I do not have figures to back up my statement. At least my statement will raise a challenge on the floor of the Senate. If contrary facts exist I should like to have them brought forth.

A great many statements have been made with reference to the enormous resources available in Alaska. However, when one gets down to analyze the facts with reference to such general statements he is unable to find any facts which shed any definite light on the subject. I am sure some resources do exist. I will not say they do not exist. However, from the standpoint of dollar value it is not such an impressive story after all. When we try to measure such claims in terms of tons or dollars, they are not quite so impressive.

I invite the attention of the Senate to another significant fact with reference to this great area. It is as large in area as California, Texas, and Montana combined. Do Senators know how many farms are located in Alaska? Do Senators know how many people make their living by digging it out of the ground, so to speak? The entire area supports only about 600 farms. There are more farms in the smallest county in Missouri, Arkansas, or Mississippi. With only 600 farms in the entire area, how agriculturally minded would the Senators from Alaska be when they tried to grapple with the many vexing and serious agricultural problems which have to be decided on the floor of the Senate?

My question raises another one. We are proposing to bring to the Senate two new Members from Alaska. They would be Members of the Senate. As such they would be vested with full power to vote. Would that power be limited to their own affairs? No; they would pass on the affairs of every Senator. Would they pass merely on international matters? No; they would pass on domestic matters as well. Let us consider the innumerable domestic matters which affect the people of Michigan, Arkansas, and every other State of the Union which the Senate passes on in the course of one session. We pass on price control. We pass on farm legislation. We pass on taxation. The Federal Government has its hand in almost everything. If Alaska and Hawaii were admitted into the Union we would bring in four new Members who would vote and pass on the domestic affairs of the people of Michigan, for example. I am sure such new Members would be men or women of integrity. However, with all candor and with all deference to their integrity, how can they know anything about the domestic affairs of the people of Michigan?

I go back to my original point. We are making new decisions. We are blazing new trails. Shall we go out to a far-off territory and bring in two new representatives who would have the power to vote on the floor of the Senate with reference to the regulation of our domestic affairs? That is the question. Fifty years ago there was not much regulation of domestic affairs. We have a different picture today. It is another very strong reason why we should not resort to an expediency of some kind to bring in two new States.

It is not a question of the virtue of the people, or their veracity, or anything of that kind. It is a question of our own domestic affairs, as well as our foreign affairs. We will be far stronger and far safer if we struggle along and endure some of the hardships we will have to encounter in foreign and domestic affairs, rather than turn the responsibility over in part to someone else. I think today we should be grappling with the foreign and domestic problems which are on our doorstep now, not problems that will be there next year, but are there now, emergency matters, which we are supposed to be considering. Instead of that we have launched into this wild goose chase about taking in other areas as members of the Union. Why is it? It is stated that it is to save face. Listen to this: We are doing this to save face with the orientals, or to try to stop the propaganda guns of the Russians. That is the main reason that is urged here today.

Mr. President, I am deadly serious about the matter of the military development and how granting statehood would help us in our military defenses, how it would strengthen us in our problems regarding defense. Perhaps Army officers may not be free to speak on that subject, I do not know, but I have not been able to find any logical explanation of how our defenses would be strengthened by having Alaska or Hawaii a State, rather than a Territory. I simply cannot find a reason. I hope that someone who is a proponent of the pending measure will cover that point before the debate is closed, and let us see what can be brought up that has any real substance in it with reference to the military phase.

I understand that as of last April the cost of the Territorial government in Alaska was approximately $9,000,000 a year, and that in money they were taking in in the neighborhood of $8,500,000. That leaves their budget out of balance approximately $500,000. I do not believe a Member of Congress could criticize them too much because the budget was out of balance, when our national budget is as much out of balance as is theirs. Even before the Korean War the National Treasury was running a deficit. Incidentally, I saw stated somewhere a few days ago that leaving out military expenditures, the budget might wind up balanced. I do not criticize the people of Alaska because their expenditures are running a little ahead of their receipts, but I point out that there will be added burdens to the State which will cost around $10,189,268, which will almost double their budget, and that money will have to be raised from local taxation. It will have to be raised from people living in this 1,500 square miles of territory.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAPMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. STENNIS. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Along the line of the able Senator's discussion on this point, it occurs to me, with reference to the domestic problems to which the Senator has referred, that the State of Alaska, if statehood is bestowed, would not be able, with the revenues it is able to raise as indicated by the figures cited by the able Senator from Mississippi, to accept its responsibility and obligations as a State, that it could not produce the revenues necessary to operate the State government and at the same time participate in such Federal-aid programs as we have, such as Federal aid for highways, Federal aid for hospitals, and Federal aid for various other services which are provided. Therefore, when statehood is once bestowed upon a Territory that is incapable of accepting the responsibilities of statehood, she will be here pleading with the Federal Government to take over the responsibilities until she can develop sufficiently economically to be able to meet the responsibilities.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I had only a very small part of my remarks written out, and the Senator took them away from me. What he has referred to is the very point I have written out to develop. I appreciate very much the Senator's contribution.

I shall read the details of the costs now being paid by the Federal Government, which, as I understand from information I was able to get, would be transferred to the local government. It is approximately a little more than double the Territory's local budget.

The Governor's office there is operating on $94,140. Of course, that would be transferred.

The secretary's office is operating on $13,000.

Legislative expense, $48,000.

Care of insane, $463,541.

Road maintenance, $2,600,000.

Fish and wildlife service, $2,670,587.

Highway matching for Federal aid, an item the Senator mentioned, $3,300,000.

State courts—a figure which is purely estimated—$1,000,000. Someone said that might be a little high, but it is put in at a round figure of $1,000,000.

The total is $10,189,268, or approximately a figure in that neighborhood, an expense which will necessarily be imposed on the local State government if the pending bill becomes law, and, as the Senator so well pointed out, matters of Federal aid to highways and other Federal-aid programs, which the local government is not now contributing to, will be added.

It was said by someone to whom I talked that it seemed that the people of Alaska did not understand the significance of the programs for which they would have to put up money out of their own pockets to match on a 50–50 basis the funds being spent on them.

The matter of roads is a big item. There is talk about the development of resources and the development of areas which are going to come under the statehood government. The tremendous cost is going to be in highways, because transportation is the great problem in Alaska. In an area which is as large as Texas, California, and Montana combined, travel is more of a problem than it is in Kentucky.

Mr. President, if I may, I shall proceed with reference to further figures about the local government, and also Federal taxation in Alaska, as I have been able to get them. I have figures as to collections by the Federal Government for the fiscal year 1949. The total amount collected was $18,266,202. Of that sum $15,680,143 was derived from income and profits taxes; $827,666 from employment taxes; and $1,718,392 was classed as "Miscellaneous." As I have said, that made a total of $18,266,202, as against an expenditure by the Federal Government, the figures of which I have here, of $71,000,000 for the fiscal year 1950, and an estimated $112,000,000 for the fiscal year 1951.

I continue my discussion with reference to the collection of Federal taxes in the Territory of Alaska. With reference to the area figures, which have already been given of the Territory involved, if I figure the population correctly, there is one person for each 10 square miles of territory. Think of it, Senators—one person for each 10 square miles of territory.

For the fiscal year 1951 an estimated $112,000,000 will be spent in Alaska, whereas their own local taxation for the operation of their Territorial government is approximately $8,500,000. That shows the acuteness of their situation even under their present form of government. While so much is being paid altogether by the Federal Government, the Governor of the Territory of Alaska in his message to the extraordinary session of the Territorial legislature on January 11, 1949, makes this statement, which I think sheds a good deal of light on the subject:

> I am informed by the Treasurer of Alaska that the cash balance in the general fund on December 31 was $6,289.40. On that same date the Auditor of Alaska was holding back in his office, for lack of funds, some 700 claims against the Territory totaling $758,209.59, the general fund deficit exceeding three-quarters of a million dollars.
> The accounts which the Territory is unable to pay because of lack of revenues cover a wide range of personal services and governmental activities. There are unpaid bills for clothing and shoes for dependent children, for food for welfare cases, for school and office supplies, and for school transportation. The claims include those of hospitals and funeral parlors and truly cover the whole field of Territorial responsibility from the cradle to the grave.

I think I should point out that the Governor is here making a plea for increase in taxes. He is pointing out in very vivid language in his message the extraordinary needs of the Territorial government. I cite his statements to show the Senate that even during the now comparative easy going time in Alaska, under Terrtorial government, as compared to statehood government, Alaska is in such dire distress as the Governor pictures in his message.

In his last sentence the Governor says there are three-quarters of a million dollars of unpaid claims.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Will the Senator state when the speech was made?

Mr. STENNIS. The speech was made by the Governor on January 11, 1949. The figures are not right up to the minute, but the statement by the Governor shows what the conditions were a reasonably short time ago. I repeat the last sentence by the Governor.

The claims—

That is, claims which could not be paid now—

include those of hospitals and funeral parlors and truly cover the whole field of territorial responsibility from the cradle to the grave. Total school refunds owed to incorporated cities and independent school districts approach half a million dollars. The university has been kept open because of voluntary loans, repayment of which is a pending obligation.

The largest of their educational institutions, the university, has been kept open by means of voluntary loans. I presume the loans are made by private individuals to finance the operation of the university, and that repayment of the loans is a pending obligation. I am not saying it is still pending, but was pending at the date the message was delivered.

Amounts owed hospitals, private individuals, and sanatoria for tuberculosis care exceed $33,000. Most of this is owed to institutions in Alaska—the Seward tuberculosis sanatorium alone is owed $10,440, which the Territory is unable to pay.

I cite that as illustration of the dire distress in which the Territorial government found itself during the relatively prosperous time of 1948, the message having been delivered on January 11, 1949.

Mr. President, I wish to say a few words with reference to the people who live in the Territory of Alaska. I give the best information available to the junior Senator from Mississippi. The figures show Alaska to be the most sparsely inhabited Territory or possession within the orbit of the United States dependencies. The latest population figures show there are presently approximately 126,000 people in the Territory. That includes Indians, Aleuts, and everyone else. Of these about 90,000 are white and the remainder are nonwhite. I find in a statement I have here the population figure given as twenty-two one-hundredths person per square mile. Awhile ago I stated that I understood the population to be 1 person for each 10 square miles of area. However, it is a matter of calculation.

The experiences of the past show that Alaska has not had an encouraging and a steady increase in population. As a matter of fact, there has actually been a loss in population from 1900 to 1930. That is a significant fact. Since the end of the gold rush there has been a loss in population in Alaska, from 1900 to 1930.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. What has been the increase in population since 1930—that is, during the past 20 years?

Mr. STENNIS. My best recollection is that since the so-called Government rush started, which may be said to be in 1930, when the population was somewhere between 60,000 and 70,000, it has now increased to 126,000.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is due primarily to the Government's activities in developing military fortifications in Alaska, is it not?

Mr. STENNIS. I think the Senator is entirely correct because there have been very extensive military preparations.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In other words, it is due to the Federal Government's expenditures in the Territory and not to the resource development by the people who live there?

Mr. STENNIS. The Senator is entirely correct. There seems to have been no real tendency to explore there and no tendency to develop. There does not seem to have been what we used to call the old pioneer movement. There simply has been no trend in that direction. That is due primarily to something over which Congress has no control—that is the climate. In the wintertime the temperature in great areas is as low as 65° below zero, whereas in the summer in the same areas there are abnormally high temperatures for a short time, which result in very serious insect infestation.

The big point to have in mind, which was referred to by the Senator from Arkansas, is that during this constructive period—this development period—from 1900 to 1930, there was a loss of population in Alaska. The Federal program, however, and particularly as it has been accentuated by the military program in the past few years, has kept up the population. Of course, we will continue a military program there as of necessity. I do not want anything I say to be considered as detracting from the idea that it is important to continue the military program there. I believe Alaska will be stronger from a military standpoint if she continues to be under Territorial government than she will if she should be under State government.

Mr. President, I have awaited for the proponents of Alaska statehood to give reasons why Alaska would be militarily stronger if she were a State. Finally I heard some Senator say the local constabulary or the local sheriffs would take action to deal with espionage in case of war. Such a statement falls of its own weight, as I see it. Such a contribution would be infinitesimal. Alaska is a vast country of 500,000 square miles, very sparsely settled. I believe the problem involved, from a military standpoint to be a Federal problem. I believe that if Alaska were granted statehood it would result in weakening her military position rather than strengthening it.

Since the last war began of course, there has been a considerable influx of people into the Territory. These have been largely governmental employees. After investigation, the statement is made that as of December 1948 there were 11,536 Federal employees in Alaska. My information is that there are more than that number now. Moreover, there are many others employed by private companies working on Government contracts in the Territory. In addition to the 11,500, there are many others working in Alaska on Government contracts, working for private companies, but the companies have Government contracts. Certainly this is not a very substantial type of population on which to build a State government. It is migratory at the best. These people are very fine people, but they follow the contractors around and wherever the contractors go they also go.

Mr. President, what will happen if and when the civilian employees of the Government are evacuated from Alaska?

There is a discouraging picture on the industrial side for Alaska, too, if the past few years are any criteria.

Going more into detail now than I did a while ago, Mr. President, let me point out that the gold-mining products of Alaska have decreased from $28,000,000 in 1941 to $8,000,000 in 1949. That is an alarming fact and a surprising fact, to my mind. I had not realized that there had been such a tremendous and rapid decrease.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Has the Senator found any record of any increase in industrial activity in that area during the past few years, other than that which could be attributed to Federal Government spending?

Mr. STENNIS. No, not that I could find. I am sure there have been some minor developments, but so far as I could determine there has been nothing substantial of a private nature. All the substantial development could be attributed, either directly or indirectly, to Federal Government activity.

The fishing industry there has had similar misfortunes, although not to quite so marked a degree.

I emphasize again that there are only 600 farms in all that vast area.

The high transportation and labor costs have almost halted the development of the timber and pulpwood resources.

Of course, Mr. President, there is a tremendous amount of pulpwood in Alaska, and at one time the timber resources of Alaska were considered to be of great value. I am sure that much of it still has great value. However, I understand that the timber resources have turned out to be not of the rather high value that they were once believed to be.

Similarly, the pulpwood industry of Alaska has declined. As I understand, the transportation costs and labor costs in that area are extremely high.

Of course, the pulpwood resources of the United States are being consumed very rapidly; but I do not believe anyone has much to look forward to, insofar as the pulpwood industry in Alaska is concerned.

As a matter of fact, the largest and most important industry in Alaska is the Federal Government activity. Such activity is hardly a proper commercial basis for the establishment of a sound and self-sustaining State.

It has been argued here by some that because in 1912, Congress created the Territory of Alaska and extended to it all the rights and privileges provided by the Constitution in the case of a Territory, we now owe Alaska the duty of admitting it to the Union as a State. However, Mr. President, no such duty is prescribed in the organic act.

It is very interesting to trace the history of the organic act in respect to the establishment of Alaska as a Territory. I have heard the statement made many times that there was a promise to give statehood to the Territory of Alaska. If such a promise was made, of course it should be considered. However, I do not see how there could be such a promise which would be binding. Of course we have to be governed by the facts in the case.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. To whom could the promise have been given? There was no government in Alaska to whom it could have been given.

Mr. STENNIS. That is a very pertinent point. I had not thought of it.

However it disturbs one's thinking to consider that perhaps some moral obligation is involved. I wish to discuss that point for a moment.

In that connection, the only fact brought out by the proponents of this proposed legislation is that in the year 1867, as I recall, Secretary Seward said to a crowd of people in Alaska that they could look forward to the day when Alaska would be a State of the Union. That was a very fine idea, and we wish the people of Alaska to continue to look forward to that day. However, so far as the making of a promise is concerned, there was no one who could make such a promise and, as the Senator from Arkansas has just brought out, there was no one to whom such a promise could be made.

On the basis of all the study I have made of this matter, I say there is not the slightest evidence of any moral obligation whatsoever on the part of the Federal Government to any people, living or dead, in Alaska to provide Alaska with statehood. I do not believe anyone can claim that people who went to Alaska relied upon anything of that kind.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. Of course I am glad to yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Assuming that there is a moral obligation, certainly the moral obligation does not attach until Alaska is developed sufficiently economically so that it can expect to meet the responsibilities of statehood. Does not the Senator agree?

Mr. STENNIS. That is absolutely correct. Assuming that there was a moral obligation, it could come into being only when it was clearly established—and I emphasize the word "clearly"—that Alaska had reached such a point in its development that it could establish and maintain a government which would have sufficient stability and sufficient soundness and power and strength, the stability and soundness and power and strength which necessarily go with union with the United States of America. However, that issue is not in the picture at all; it is not involved.

As I said a moment ago, I have studied the history of Alaska; and the only thing I have found which could be used at all as the basis of any moral obligation or promise is more or less of an oratorical statement made by Secretary Seward to some people in Alaska many, many years ago.

I regret that I do not have the actual dates before me at the moment, but it is true that Alaska has not remained a Territory as long as four of the present States remained Territories, prior to their admission to the Union as States. I have forgotten now just what four States they were. However, that fact certainly demonstrates that in the present situation there is no discrimination against Alaska.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a statement which I think is quite pertinent to this discussion. Mr. Hanson W. Baldwin, writing in the New York Times of April 23, 1950, had this to say, based upon his ideas and beliefs:

> As a source of wartime raw materials, Alaska in its present state of development is hardly worth defending.

Those are Mr. Baldwin's words, not mine. We notice that he prefaces that statement with the phrase "as a source of wartime raw materials."

Then he said:

> It produces a fair amount of gold, some copper, and enough coal for its own needs. Otherwise its mineral resources are largely either unexplored or inaccessible.

Mr. President, that is a significant statement. I do not know whether Mr. Baldwin knows what he is talking about, but I present his statement here and shall let the proponents of this proposed legislation attack the statement if they wish to do so. I think Mr. Baldwin knows enough about the facts to warrant the giving of weight to his ideas and statements.

He further said:

> On the whole, Alaska is deficient in all industry, and could not lend any significant support to a war effort.

That is a striking statement. It leads us to believe that, as in the case of all other matters pertaining to war, all contributions to a war effort on the part of the United States must come from the continental area of the United States of America.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the statement the Senator has just read is correct, Alaska would be a liability, not an asset, to the United States in time of war or war crisis. Is that true?

Mr. STENNIS. That is true.

I continue to quote from the statement by Mr. Baldwin:

> It is a land of great distances, of sparse populations, of towering peaks, of barren tundras, of untrodden wildernesses, and of relentless winters.

Mr. President, let me point out another striking fact about Alaska, from a geographical standpoint. I have said that 99.7 percent of Alaska is owned by the Federal Government, and only three-tenths of 1 percent of Alaska is in private hands. However, as I understand, only seven-tenths of 1 percent of Alaska has ever been surveyed. In other words, for the most part Alaska is an uncharted wilderness, for only seven-tenths of 1 percent of Alaska has ever been surveyed. That is an astounding fact, when considered in connection with the request of Alaska for admission to the Union as one of the States of the Union.

Mr. President, the peak of political prestige and power and influence in the world today is considered to be membership in the United States of America as a State. The Roman Empire never saw the day when it equaled in real glory my conception of a state which is in the United States of America. However, only seven-tenths of 1 percent of the vast area of Alaska has ever even been surveyed.

Mr. Baldwin also said that:

> Wintertime temperatures range down to 65 degrees below. Brief exposure can mean death.

Mr. President, there is a region which has not been developed. Its lack of development is not due to the lack of a flag flying over it or a lack of protection by the Federal Government. No charge is made that the Federal Government has ever failed to protect Alaska. The lack of development of Alaska does not arise because of any lack of law or order, but the explanation is to be found in that short sentence which I have read from the article by Mr. Baldwin, namely:

> Brief exposure can mean death.

Mr. President, some Members of the Senate who sit on the Appropriations Committee have heard in detail the testimony which I had the privilege of hearing briefly one afternoon, with reference to such tremendous drops in temperature and the prolonged cold and the inaccessibility of those vast areas. That testimony came from friendly witnesses, not critical ones. When we put all that testimony together and consider it in connection with the statistics, it is very, very clear why Alaska has not been developed.

> In summer, when temperatures go as high as 90 above, life is plagued by clouds of dust, botflies, and mosquitoes.

I did not know that. I quote further from Mr. Baldwin:

> Facilities of all kinds are scarce, and such facilities as exist are often primitive. Conveniences which are normal in the States are luxuries in Alaska, and costly. Housing is extremely scarce, and even in the larger towns many people live in hotels.

I can understand that, too, because I heard testimony before this Appropriations Subcommittee which contained references to little houses, ordinary little homes, which would cost about $4,000 or $5,000 perhaps in Arkansas or in the State of Washington, which, according to the testimony, would cost $40,000 in Alaska. One in Alaska cost $51,000. It merely shows the enormous cost of building something which is proof against the weather.

Quoting further:

> Transportation and communication problems add immeasurably to the difficulties of Alaskan defense.

Someone may answer that by saying, "Well, they say they are going to fly. They are going to develop that great area up there. They are not going to have to build any roads. They are not going to have the ordinary transportation problems. Everyone is going to fly."

We know the old grass-roots population that it takes to sustain a State government, to have counties, to carry on the functions of school districts, local hospitals, and all that goes to make up local government and to carry on State government. Those functions are not going to be conducted from airplanes. They are going to have to get their feet on the ground. And that is one thing which impresses me about this situation. The people up there do not have their feet on the ground. It is a matter of hit and miss, touch and go, come in and get out quickly. It is a proposition of making some money quickly, if they can, and of getting out. I say that with all deference. Quoting further:

> Much of the Territory is virtually impassable, even in the summer, and if a man leaves the road he gets mired down in thawed top-soil.

That is in the summertime. Continuing:

> In Alaska, the price of everything is high. The country's remoteness, its inadequate transportation, and its lack of local industry are largely responsible.

Its lack of local industry. Mr. President, what local industry could there be in Alaska? We have in Mississippi a program that is called balancing agriculture with industry. It is an excellent program. We are trying to balance agriculture, which we have all the time, with more industry. We are making headway with it. But we have already seen that Alaska, in all these 83 years, has developed but 600 farms. It has, we might say, no agriculture. This gentleman says that they are not going to have local industries. Here is his statement:

> The country's remoteness, its inadequate transportation, and its lack of local industry are largely responsible.

That is, for the high prices. If industries have not developed there in the 83 years, it goes back to the same reasoning: It is because of something we cannot control. Quoting further:

> But part of the high costs are entirely artificial. As in the gold-rush days, many people have gone to Alaska "to get it and get."

In other words, that has been the story thus far. How would statehood substantially or materially change that situation?

Here is a matter that I meant to mention in the beginning, and I think it is one of the most important considerations with reference to the entire bill. That is, that if we pass this bill, admitting this Territory to statehood, if it should prove to be an error, who could correct it? The act would be final; it would be binding. We would be entering into a contractual relationship which would be irrevocable. It would be far-reaching. There could be no turning back. There could be no correction of the error, and the doors would be wide open to send their representatives to the Senate. Mr. President, let us not fool ourselves. If we pass this bill, the momentum will have been developed for passage of the Hawaiian bill. I understand the momentum is greater with respect to this bill than it is for the Hawaiian bill. We had just as well face it now. The able chairman of this committee has just sharpened his weapon. The Alaskan bill is but a warm-up.

Are we going to admit Alaska, and are we going to admit Hawaii? And then, are we going to admit the Virgin Islands? Are we going to admit Puerto Rico? Are we going to admit Guam? Okinawa? Someone will say, "Why, that is ridiculous. That is too remote." Mr. President, a few years ago, people laughed at the idea of a bill to make Hawaii or Alaska a State within the United States. We had just as well face the issues now. The question is not whether we are going to admit Alaska as a State. The immediate question is, Are we going to admit Alaska and Hawaii as States, and then, if we do, what is the reasoning whereby we can chop the process off and stop as to the others?

I go back largely to the opening part of my thought, namely, that this is a most far-reaching project. I started to say it is most vexing. It is not vexing to me, because it has given me a greater appreciation of what statehood means—of what it means to be a State within the United States. It is the most far-reaching question which is before the Eighty-first Congress, and if it goes over to the Eighty-second Congress, it will become the most far-reaching question then. I verily believe that if we admit these Territories as States, then, long after the problems that vex us now have been solved, the problems which we shall create by admitting these Territories into the Union will vex us, and—I hate to say this, but I believe—it will be undermining some of the very soundest structures, the most fundamental structures of our form of government.

If I may, I should like to read a few words from an editorial entitled "A Daring Experiment." The editorial appeared in an issue of the Christian Science Monitor of recent date, and was written by Mr. Richard L. Strout. It bears a Washington date line and reads:

> Almost casually people accept the probable statehood of Alaska, Hawaii, and maybe Puerto Rico.

Mr. President, I had the experience lately of receiving a great many letters from Mississippi in favor of statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, and I received communications from civic clubs in my State favoring statehood for both. Finally, one day, I took time enough to write to 12 of these people whom I personally knew. I wrote them something about the facts. I gave them something of an outline of what I have said here. Of the 12, 11 responded. As I remember, nine responded directly that they had changed their minds; two of them said, "It looks different from what I thought, and so far as I am concerned, just go on and do what you want to." The twelfth man did not answer. This fall, I took occasion to explain this matter briefly in several places. The people were amazed when they found the physical facts with reference to Alaska and that in that great area only a small portion of it was privately owned, and very little of it even charted or surveyed. They were amazed. I have not since received a single resolution nor one letter further in favor of the proposal. I do not believe there is any doubt as to what the verdict of the American people would be, once the facts were made known to them.

I raise this question: It is said here that statehood for Alaska and Hawaii is in the party platforms. It is, just as it was in the resolutions adopted by civic clubs. Mr. President, how many members of those clubs do you suppose ever heard the subject debated? How many participated in the discussions when those party platforms were being written? How many delegates had the matter explained to them and were told what it would mean to bring these Territories into the Union? Was it ever explained on the floor of the Democratic Convention, or of the Republican Convention? Was it ever discussed in the State conventions when they met throughout the 48 States? Were the facts brought out here? I am not criticizing anyone. We know how those things are done and how the resolutions and platforms are written. A great campaign was under way, and I think it has been conducted on a rather high plane. That campaign has been going on throughout the United States, through the civic clubs, particularly with reference to statehood for Hawaii. So far as I know, wrongful tactics have not been resorted to, or anything of that kind. The Hawaiians cherish the idea of becoming citizens of the Union through admission of Hawaii as a State. I commend them for it. But there has been a very smooth campaign going on, and I have not yet heard of a civic club that adopted resolutions that had both sides of this question explained to them. I believe the campaign has proceeded throughout the Nation, but the matter has not been explained to the people.

I quote further. Mr. Stout says:

Almost casually people accept the probable statehood of Alaska, Hawaii, and maybe Puerto Rico. The lame-duck Senate may ratify the statehood decision already passed by the House. This decision extends statehood to noncontiguous parts of the world and makes them an integral part of the domestic American Government.

In other words, we are making a great political choice; we are not following the British example of commonwealth status for overseas dominions but the French example which ties overseas areas directly into the home legislature.

Does anyone believe that France has been strengthened by such procedure? Something has happened to France.

Even France, however, recognizes the difficulties of such integration and gives Algiers, Martinique, Gaudaloupe and the like special status.

Mr. President, we would not give these areas special status. We would bring them into the bosom of the Union. We would make them part of the flesh, blood, and bone of the Union. According to the opening statement of the chairman, the proponents of the legislation stand on the same ground with reference to Alaska and Hawaii. One action in granting statehood to Alaska and Hawaii would be final, lasting, binding, in perpetuity. There could be no reconsideration, no alteration, no taking back later.

I continue to quote from the article:

The United States proposes no such special status. Alaska, Hawaii, possibly Puerto Rico and any other territories added to the American spheres in the centuries ahead will be made integral parts of the American domestic government, as much as New York or Texas.

Mr. President, reference to Texas brings up some very favorable memories, and leads me to make a suggestion. If we wish to take in some more States, or if we must have some new States, let us get them from Texas. That is a good place to go for new States. Texas has sufficient territory. Texas has enough people. Texas has the law to cover such a situation. We could do it under its own law. Texas reserved the right to create new States. However, it is a serious matter to go out beyond the area of the United States to bring in new States.

I continue to quote:

The prospective development is one of the most daring experiments in government ever attempted.

Mr. President, I believe that to be true. It is one of the most daring experiments in government ever attempted. We have our problems, but we are getting along fairly well. I do not believe we can strengthen ourselves by going out to the middle of the Pacific Ocean and taking Hawaii in as a State. I believe such a step would weaken us. At least it could be an opening wedge in that direction. Men may disagree on the question before us, but I am appealing to the logic of the Senate. I believe such a step would be a weakening process. I continue to read from the article:

Most of the problem revolves around the fact that every State, no matter what population, gets two Senate seats—

The writer of the article was very much impressed by that fact—and that the United States Senate, as a body, exercises extraordinary constitutional powers hardly to be matched by any other upper legislature in the world.

I strike out the word "hardly." It exercises extraordinary constitutional powers not matched by any other upper legislature in the world.

Mr. President, we have been growing in strength while other countries unfortunately have been losing strength. I do not believe we can strengthen ourselves under these conditions by taking in people. I say it with all deference to the people involved. To do so would be for us to go down, not up. I believe we would greatly weaken ourselves and expose our flank by taking new territory into our very soul, so to speak, and making it part of our flesh, blood, and bone.

I quote further:

In brief, the Senate can veto the will of the representative lower House which is picked on a basis of population.

Mr. President, the Senate has the power. It can veto the will of the other House, where membership is based on population. We have the absolute authority to do so. We represent States. The new Senators would have the veto power. They would have the veto power on our domestic affairs. It is a serious matter in these modern times. The Senate of the United States not only controls foreign affairs, but it exercises control also over domestic affairs. We would give the veto power to the four Senators from these new States, and on many questions they would hold the balance of power.

I continue to quote from the article:

It is widely agreed that it is unfair to keep Alaska and Hawaii in a subordinate status any longer.

I agree with that statement, Mr. President. I think Alaska should have the responsibility of choosing its own governor. I believe we should give such power to the people of Alaska We should see what they would do with it. We should see how they would exercise the power. Reference was made to the manner in which the appointed Governor is managing things in Alaska. I am not passing on that question. I believe the people of Alaska should have the responsibility of choosing their own Governor. It would be a reasonable step to take in their progressive approach to what I think the ultimate achievement would be. To admit Alaska into the Union would be to jump the area from a Territorial status to the highest state of political perfection. We would be doing it at a time when things do not look too well in that Territory. The Governor of Alaska is appointed by the Federal Government. Let the people of Alaska elect their own Governor. Let them have the responsibility of choosing their chief executive officer. Let us see how they would develop along that line.

I quote further:

The time has come to make one of the great decisions in America's expansion. Shall it be done by direct integration or by some alternative dominion status?

Theoretically the Senate is an equal and coordinate body with the House. Actually because of its exclusive treaty-ratifying power, smaller membership, greater skill and maneuverability, and power of individual Senators to filibuster, the Senate is the more powerful body.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of North Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. STENNIS. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator read the sentence again? I could not quite understand one word he read. It began with the letter "f."

Mr. STENNIS. I shall read the entire sentence. I appreciate the Senator's giving such close attention. I wish we would give as much attention to the other points involved. The sentence reads:

Theoretically the Senate is an equal and coordinate body with the House. Actually because of its exclusive treaty-ratifying power, smaller membership, greater skill and maneuverability, and power of individual Senators to filibuster——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That was the word I did not get.

Mr. STENNIS. To continue—

The Senate is the more powerful body.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STENNIS. I appreciate the Senator's make a point of such a little word. I assure the Senator it has no application whatsoever to the present debate. I am discussing the merits of the proposed legislation, and I am sure the Senator does not wish it to be passed on until we have had full debate. However, I appreciate his humor. I read further:

Alaska has a population of about 100,000—

It has been shown to be more than that—

Hawaii, 425,000; Puerto Rico, over 2,000,000. The Constitution permits one-third of the Senate, plus one, to defeat a treaty. Suppose the two Senators from Alaska opposed a treaty. Their votes would cancel out four affirmative votes. In an extreme case the Senators representing 100,000 people would cancel out the will of Senators from New York and Pennsylvania with 25,000,000 people.

Those are facts which could develop. However, my main point is that we would take two Territories into the Union as States and give their representatives power to vote and pass on domestic and foreign affairs of our country, to which they are not attached geograpically, to which they are not attached in background, and to which in many ways they are not attached in culture, ideals, and ideas. Many people in these areas cannot possibly have any conception of constitutional government, of the common law of England, or the very bedrock of our constitutional government. I do not object to the people as individuals. I am thinking of the far-reaching consequences if we were to admit these areas as States.

Mr. President, I have before me the report filed on the proposed legislation by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, together with the minority views of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER]. I invite the attention of Senators to the favorable report and to the minority views. I do not know to what extent the subject has been studied by Members of the Senate. If I had the time—and I see I do not have the time—I could dwell on a number of points which are made with singular clarity. However, I shall not take the time now to do so. I believe I have fairly well covered the main point I had in mind. I respectfully submit that the subject challenges our very best thought, and I believe that every Member of the Senate should give the subject his most serious consideration. I am certain every Member of the Senate will do so.

The action proposed, if taken, would be far-reaching, it would be final, and it would be binding. These bills have already been passed by the House, and once they pass this body—but I do not believe they will—we will have a binding and final and irrevocable contract with the people of the two Territories, and they will become a part of the Union.

I submit the question deserves the most careful consideration of every Member of this body, and with great deference to every member of the committee, I believe it is such a far-reaching matter that we cannot simply say, "Well, I will just go along with whatever the majority of the committee did. They looked into it." I say with all deference to their judgment, and with high regard for their integrity, that this is a matter to which every Member of the Senate, the 96 Members, should give most careful and complete consideration. To open this door would affect the vitals and fundamentals of our Government.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have been checking over the records in the Senate Manual and I find with great interest that the State of Mississippi was represented in the Senate of the United States from the Twenty-fourth to the Twenty-ninth Congress, from the 4th of March 1835 to the 3d of March 1847, by the Honorable Robert J. Walker. It appears from the studies of our committee that on July 2, 1868, Mr. Walker—who thereafter, by the way, became a Governor of Kansas, a former Senator from the State of Mississippi later becoming Governor of Kansas—wrote a letter to the then Secretary of State, William H. Seward, and he, in turn, transmitted it by letter to the President of the United States, President Johnson. I thought the Senator from Mississippi, who has made such a persuasive and pleasing argument, as he always does, might be interested in having me read into the RECORD at this point what his predecessor of 100 years and more ago had to say.

First comes the letter of the Secretary of State to the President:

The PRESIDENT.

MY DEAR SIR: I herewith give you a letter of Robert J. Walker, and I concur in his suggestion that you personally appeal to Mr. Boyer and to Mr. Ker and other members of their political party.

Very faithfully yours,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

The enclosure explains his reference to Mr. Boyer and Mr. Ker. The enclosure was the letter from the former Senator from Mississippi and read:

JULY 2, 1868.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: I have done all I can here for Alaska. Now I go to New York. The Tribune will come out for Alaska, I think, and I wish the democracy to put it on their banner. This would rally the Democratic members and alarm the Rads—

I do not know what he meant by "rads." I am sure he did not mean "reds." He probably meant the radicals. The letter continues:

Now, excuse me for saying that in a matter so vital, of such transcendant importance to the country, should not you and the President exert yourselves with every democratic Member by fair argument to support the appropriation—

The issue under discussion at that time in the House of Representatives was the appropriation of $7,200,000, urged by President Johnson and Secretary of State Seward, to buy the Territory of Alaska, and I have previously read the arguments which I have heard here today against the admission of Alaska and against the admission of California, about a barren waste, and people who were unable to take advantage of resources, and the great mistake it would be to pay any attention to the proposal. The question at the time of this letter was the question of the appropriation. The letter proceeds:

Boyer had spoken against, and, it is said, Kerr, of Indiana, will. Immortal as will be the vetoes of the President, sublime as has been his conduct during the impeachment, yet the great act of his administration will be the acquisition of Alaska. The theater of our greatest triumphs is to be the Pacific, where we will soon have no formidable European rival. The consequences are ultimately the political and commercial control of the world.

Yours truly,

R. J. WALKER.

I am sure those who read the able speech of the Senator from Mississippi know that at least he has one predecessor who saw great virtue in Alaska, in its resources, and in the potentialities of that Territory.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I appreciate the contribution to the debate that very fine letter makes, and I think it is timely to bring it in at the conclusion of my remarks. I know the reputation of the late Senator Walker was very high. He was one of the great representatives of our State, but I would not think that the fact that a hundred years ago he was in favor of Alaska being bought from Russia would in any way fortify the argument for making it a State within the United States, when unfortunately its record of development has been so slow and so poor as is shown by a study of the facts.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wonder if I could address a question to the Senator before he yields the floor.

Mr. STENNIS. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I observe that there are two Senators on the Republican side of the Chamber and three Senators on the Democratic side, in addition to the Senator from Mississippi, and the distinguished new Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SMITH] who is presiding, so perhaps the Senator from Mississippi will not be able to answer my question. The full day has been given over to discusions which, I acknowledge quite frankly, have been on the merits of the issue. The speech of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] and the speech of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] have both been upon the issue of statehood, and they have both been completely relevant. But the question before the Senate is the motion of the majority leader to consider the Alaska statehood bill. Can the Senator from Mississippi give me any intimation at all as to what the disposition of Senators who share his views may be with respect to permitting the motion to be adopted and the bill to come before the Senate tomorrow?

Mr. STENNIS. Of course, the Senator from Mississippi cannot speak for any other Senator, but he will make the observation that as the facts with reference to Alaska come out and become better known, the opposition to the bill is growing by leaps and bounds. I think there will be further discussion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The facts can be brought out under the discussion of the bill as well as on the motion to consider the bill, so my question was, Does the Senator find it in his heart to give me any information at all as to what the program will be tomorrow?

Mr. STENNIS. I really have no particular light on the subject. I have given the Senator the benefit of part of my views. That is all I can say.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thought I would give the Senator from Mississippi an opportunity to answer the question.

THE NEW WAR IN KOREA

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, in addressing the present occupant of the chair [Mr. SMITH of North Carolina], I should like to add my word of welcome and congratulations to those of other Members of the Senate who spoke when the Senator from North Carolina was sworn in.

Mr. President, to my mind, the business which has been pending before the Senate all day has been exceedingly important, but by contrast with another question it is, I think, at least for the time being, almost meaningless. The Senator from Washington refers to the question of Korea and wishes for a very few minutes to stick to that question and indicate, as best he can, how he feels about it.

Mr. President, earlier in the day the United Press carried the following dispatch from Tokyo:

TOKYO, November 28.—Gen. Douglas MacArthur accused Communist China today of hurling more than 200,000 troops against the collapsing allied line in Korea in "an entirely new war."

He said China's full-scale intervention posed issues beyond his authority and asked the United Nations what they wanted to do about it.

In a special communiqué, he said Red China had shattered his "high hopes" of an early end of the Korean war that would get American troops "home by Christmas."

Informed quarters interpreted General MacArthur's communiqué as a plea to the UN to give him the right to strike back across the Manchurian border at Communist China.

General MacArthur said China already had sent into Korea a "major segment" of its continental armed forces with the obvious intention of reinforcing them from the 400,000 to 500,000 reserves beyond allied reach in Manchuria. His estimate of more than 200,000 Chinese in North Korea was nearly 3½ times greater than that given at the start of his ill-fated allied northwest offensive 3 days ago. Then allied intelligence estimated that there were 60,000 Chinese and 40,000 North Koreans massed before the allied line. The 200,000 Chinese outnumbered allied troops on the sagging northwest front by 2 to 1.

The meaning of these words is clear to my mind and, I believe, to the minds of many other worried Americans, and citizens of other friendly countries as well.

The only possible action in the present crisis, as I see it, Mr. President, is equally clear: Gen. Douglas MacArthur ought immediately to be given the right to strike wherever military necessity dictates, behind the Yalu River, or anywhere else.

I hope I am wrong, but without this power it seems obvious to me that our American and allied armies in Korea are lost, and our men will be sacrificed.

It has been said, Mr. President, that war is the extension of foreign policy blunders. Certainly I believe this to be true, in part, but there is no point in arguing about the past. We are now at that war stage. We are at war in every sense of that word, all the euphonious language of the diplomats to the contrary notwithstanding. We Americans, we in the Senate, ought to meet the situation accordingly.

War is a serious business. It cannot be won in the steam-heated chambers of a building in New York, however hard the men in that vacuum work.

The war picture in Korea today bears a dramatic and sad resemblance to the situation only a few weeks ago, when our troops reached the thirty-eighth parallel, after the brilliant victories engineered by General MacArthur and his splendid troops, representing America and certain other nations as well. Then, Mr. President, our troops were forced to halt for 14 days, while the diplomats, doing their best—but their best was not good enough—decided what the general ought to do next. The net result of that indecision was time for the North Koreans to regroup, to rearm, and to reestablish their supply lines. The victory won south of the thirty-eighth parallel had to be won all over again. Just let the average American read the casualty lists from week to week and he will know precisely what I mean. The war once won had to be won again. The war around and beyond the thirty-eighth parallel was won the hard way, and it was won largely with American brains and American blood.

The situation today is almost identical, as I understand it. We must win the hard way a war which seemingly was won not many days ago.

Ever since the beginning of the Korean conflict the Chinese Communist Government has been massing its armed forces just across the Yalu River. There are today, I am told, at least 42 divisions, comprising some half a million men. Such an army needs a vast stream of supplies. It cannot operate without food, without clothes, without arms and ammunition.

There are some of us in this body, Mr. President, who have seen all we want to see, if we had our choice, of war, and we know the vital importance and the vastness of the supply line required by any army to wage a successful war. Without that supply line any army will disintegrate. Did we not learn that in World War II? The German armies began their decisive retreats, which meant that we were going to win the war in 1945, only after American air power had destroyed the effectiveness of the German supply line. That is likewise, I think, the answer to the great dilemma that faces America today. We learned the same lesson in Korea. The initial Red Communist attack was finally driven back, as most of us recall, because we Americans, together with the limited forces of a few allies, achieved superior fire power, superior equipment, superior supply power, and superior air cover.

The Chinese Communists appear to be anything but stupid for they have learned that supply lesson well, too. Their present offensive is well planned, well executed, and well backed. If it is not all of these things, I cannot account for the distance the Chinese have advanced today against our American Ground Forces.

Our American troops, together with those of our allies, are outnumbered 2 to 1, we are told this afternoon. They can as easily be outnumbered 5 or 10 to 1 tomorrow.

The only answer, Mr. President, we can give the men whose lives are being sacrificed is: "Go ahead and protect yourselves by fighting back with all your strength and with every weapon which America and the United Nations can make available to you."

I think our troops ought to have immediate authority to strike at the supply lines, at the heart, at the marshaling areas, of the enemy. Until that is done—and I hope again my guess is completely wrong—we can only expect an accumulation in Korea of one disaster after another disaster.

Is it reasonable, Mr. President, to expect our troops to go into battle against overwhelming odds, overwhelming manpower—and no American I have ever heard of has claimed that we have manpower superiority to the enemy we are fighting—while our forces are denied the right to strike back at the very brutal and a most uncompromising enemy?

Are we going to allow our men to be sent into battle with their hands tied behind their backs by diplomatic debates and red tape, to be shot down by Communist Chinese armies?

Mr. President, I think the responsibility is partly ours in the Senate of the United States. The Senate of the United States is charged by the Constitution with a joint responsibility for the conduct of foreign affairs. We, in this body, owe it to the people of this Nation to assure their security, if we can, and to protect them, if we can, from war. We owe an even greater debt to the men who have already left their blood on this foreign battlefield, and to the men we have asked to die—and they are doing that gallantly and well.

We ought to accept the responsibility which the founding fathers placed upon the Senate of the United States. From my point of view, the Senate ought to demand with all its authority and all its power and all its prestige that our troops be given the order to strike at the enemy wherever he is gathering his strength. If I had my way, the Senate of the United States would demand today that General MacArthur be given, through the United Nations, full authority to cross the Yalu River, or to take any steps which he, as the man in whose hands we have placed the lives of tens of thousands of Americans, finds necessary to victory and to the protection of the men and women under his command.

Mr. President, I believe that such an order ought to go out today. The difference is simply that between the casualty list as it stands now—which horrifies, and properly so, millions of American mothers and fathers, and Americans generally—and the casualty list as it will stand tomorrow if this order is not promptly issued.

We cannot, sir, in good conscience go about our normal business, which we have been doing in the Senate all day, in the comfort of our Nation—a comfort which the sacrifices of our troops abroad make possible—unless we see to it that the bonds are severed from the hands of those who fight your battles and mine across the sea.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Washington is but one of 96 Members of this body. He assumes the sole responsibility for the recommendation of the statement which he has just offered. He has spoken simply to offer one man's opinion on the greatest question before the world today. He thinks the Senate should be talking and thinking about the situation in Korea, and thinking and talking about nothing else. That is not to say that he is criticizing, or denying the right of any other Member of this body to speak on any other subject, and particularly on the business which is now before the Senate. If this were our one and only consideration, we might be of some real assistance to those of our kind who are in such grave peril on foreign soil.

Let us not forget that the so-called free nations of the world are not yet half so determined to protect freemen and to preserve free institutions as the apostles of aggression, of tyranny and oppression, are determined to drive freedom from the face of the earth.

When the Senator from Washington returned from an extended tour of western Europe in early September, he very humbly offered several recommendations to the Senate of the United States. The first one was the most important. It is very brief, and I hope the indulgence of my colleagues will permit me to read it:

> Win the war in Korea in the quickest possible time and with as much help as can be offered on the ground, in the air, and on the water by every free nation in the United Nations. Every nation has something to offer. The greatest victory that can come out of the war in Korea is for all of the world to know that the United Nations, working together, put out the fire of aggression. Until the United Nations are flying every member nation's flag in Korea, everything else must be secondary, and most other things are meaningless.

Mr. President, 3 months have gone by since September, and the war in Korea goes steadily on, growing always in danger and intensity because of two reasons: Because the enemy is now being permitted to stockpile his supplies at will, and because too few of our United Nations allies are committed in Korea to fight for freedom and self-preservation.

Like every other Senator, I have recently been in my own State and across the country. During that time I have asked many a person many a question, trying to find out what they were thinking about and what their wishes for the future were. Among other questions, I have invariably posed this one:

> Who is fighting in Korea?

Their guesses went from "Every member nation of the United Nations" to "Nobody but the United States of America."

One of those estimates is too high, and the other is too low. I want the RECORD as of this 28th day of November to tell us exactly where we stand. I am assuming that these facts, which came today from the Senate Armed Services Committee, of which committee I am a member, are correct. I offer them, not out of prejudice to any nations which are not fighting on our side in the war in Korea, but out of a hope that it will help to tell more Americans just who is fighting, from which knowledge perhaps a better way can be found to get more people to work with the United States of America.

The Americans have committed in Korea, as far as Army Ground Forces are concerned, the First Cavalry, the Second, Third, Seventh, Twenty-fourth, and Twenty-fifth Infantry Divisions; together with the First Marine Division.

The Australians have contributed—and it is undoubtedly doing a first-class job—one fighter squadron.

The British have so far committed, as I understand the figures, one brigade group and one commando unit. The brigade group probably consists of from one and one-half to two regiments.

The Filipinos have committed one battalion.

Thailand—or Siam—has committed one battalion, and the remainder of a regimental combat team is presently en route.

Turkey has presently committed one regimental combat team.

Canada has contributed a squadron of transport planes, and one infantry battalion is en route. We hope it gets there soon. The Canadians are fine fighters, and the United Nations in Korea can use all the fine fighters they can get.

The Union of South Africa has contributed one fighter squadron, which is en route.

The Republic of Korea has committed, as of now, the Third, Fourth, Sixth Seventh, and Eighth Divisions, along with the Capital Division.

Mr. President, it is not for me to judge this afternoon where the rest of the United Nations are; but I cannot forget that back in the latter part of June the United Nations adopted a resolution saying, "One for all, and all for one, now let us together drive this aggressor out of Korea."

The figures I have just offered are given to the Senate on the 28th day of November. They speak clearly for themselves: For reasons not known to me, a majority of the member nations of the United Nations have not yet thought this contest to preserve freedom on the face of the earth is so demanding as to require much of what they have.

Mr. President, if any Member of this great body has a better answer than the one the Senator from Washington has just offered—namely, to give General MacArthur, the commanding general for the United Nations' troops in Korea, the right to strike at the supply lines of the enemy—I wish that gentleman would rise and would state the better answer.

The Senator from Washington would like to hear a better answer, and he would like to be in full support of whatever it turns out to be.

But if the best answer we have is to authorize General MacArthur to bomb and destroy the enemy's supply lines and depots, let us, the Senate of the United States, within the confines of our clear responsibility which flows from the United States Constitution, exercise every ounce of our influence in the direction of the United Nations, meeting in solemn conclave in New York, to see to it that Gen. Douglas MacArthur and his men of every free nation, fighting with him, are promptly given the tools to work with, are promptly given a chance to live, a chance which, if they do not have the power to strike at the enemy's power to strike at them, they will not have much longer

As matters stand this afternoon, Mr. President, we Americans and our friends, too limited in number, are not prepared, nor can we ever possibly prepare ourselves, to win the war in Korea, because wars are won by establishing supply lines to troops in the field; and thus far our enemy has had nothing to worry about.

The United Nations has in fact—and I hope they change that decision—guaranteed this enemy of ours every protection for his build-up and for his supply lines. To continue this decision will permit the enemy to wage war without interference for a long time to come.

Mr. President, one of two things must inevitably happen very shortly: The enemy's supply lines must be destroyed, consumed, and done away with; or the United States of America, together with those allies fighting with her, must—not will or shall, but must—inevitably be humiliated, be hurt deep down inside, and be badly defeated on the field of battle.

Mr. President and gentlemen, why talk of anything else until we know whether we as a nation are to live or die in Korea?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I cannot permit the remarks of the Senator from Washington to go without an additional statement upon my part. Earlier today, in opening the debate on the statehood bills, I referred to the fact that a delegation of Red Chinese diplomats is now before the Assembly of the United Nations. I spoke of them as Reds, not only because they represent the Red Chinese Government, but also because their hands are dripping with the red blood of soldiers of the United Nations, of whom Americans are the preponderant number.

I recognize fully the tremendous responsibilities which are assumed by any person who urges now the resort to force against Red China. We have been exerting every possible effort and every restraint to make an appeal to reason and understanding through the United Nations.

What the Senator from Washington has said about the conditions in Korea has been, as I see it, correct. Members of the United Nations have not been fully committed to the enterprise upon which we have engaged in Korea to stop unprovoked aggression and to carry out the objectives of the United Nations, an organization which was set up by a solemn international conference in which were represented, not the Red Chinese who now are attacking our men, but their Red masters in the Kremlin. These Chinese are the puppets; they are not the masters. They are offering the bodies of Chinese soldiers, while the masters in the Kremlin are conserving their own great numerical military superiority of manpower.

It seems to me to be perfectly clear that the United States cannot safely involve itself in a war with China, because we cannot throw our manpower into a conflict while Russia pretends to withhold its hand. China is not the author of the Red Chinese invasion of Korea. China is merely the agent. Soviet Russia is the author of this attack.

The spokesman for the masters in the Kremlin are now in the United Nations, Jacob Malik sitting upon the Security Council, and Vishinsky in the Assembly. For my part, though as I say I realize that this is a matter of great responsibility—for my part, I feel that the Congress of the United States and the Executive must be prepared now in defense of American citizens and American soldiers to issue an ultimatum to the Red authors of this military aggression. For my part, I would not listen to another word—not a word from Malik or Vishinsky, or from the Chinese puppets—until they have agreed to stop the Chinese attack upon United Nations forces in Korea. Failure to serve such an ultimatum now, it seems to me, would condemn us in the court of mankind of complete lack of courage. It would be a pusillanimous thing, it seems to me, to continue conversations with the diplomatic representatives of the totalitarian aggressors while they are shooting down our men. Nothing can be done in the Senate tonight, as the Senator from Washington has said, and it should not be done. But, for my part, I cannot let this day go by without making the observations which I have now made. I am satisfied, let me say, from inquiries that I have made, that our military officials are and have been giving consideration to this matter, but there must not be delay.

We must speak. We are the last defenders of freedom with the power to act. We have the weapon. It is the atomic bomb. We have it. We have tried to maintain the secret of the bomb. We have not been particularly successful, because the spies have been at work seeking the information and getting it. We have tried the remedies of the courts. We have arrested and convicted spies. We have arrested and we have tried the Communist leaders in the United States. We have moved through all the patterns of legal action established by free nations, but while we have been doing that in the regular order of democratic procedure the dictators of the Kremlin have been preparing and mounting this attack. It could be carried out only by the active support and participation of Red Russia.

For us to sit longer in diplomatic conversations with Red Russia it seems to me is to sacrifice our own self-respect. The United Nations cannot be a success without us. If Russia and the Red puppets from China are permitted to waste weary days in diplomatic debate before the Assembly or the Security Council of the United Nations while the military preparations of Russia proceed, then the time will not be too far distant when we will not even have the superiority of the bomb.

We cannot permit ourselves to be drawn into a series of big and little wars with the satellites and puppets of the Soviets while the latter, like spiders in a web, sit in the center watching us exhaust our substance around the perimeter while they build up the military power with which they plan to take over the world in one all-inclusive totalitarian dictatorship.

Mr. President, I think the statement of the Senator from Washington was quite proper. I think it was important that it should be made. I think the Senator from Washington recognizes, as I recognize, that the Executive is charged with a deep responsibility here, even as we are, and that it is a matter of the greatest importance to every one of us that every precaution be taken, because the decision that may be made may be the decision to bring upon the world a third world war. And no man on the floor of the Senate, in the House of Representatives, or anywhere else in our Government or among our people has the vision to predict what the result of such a war may be. Nevertheless, I think the issue is clear now. Russia is without good will. It aims at world conquest. We have the choice between freedom and the expansion of totalitarian slavery throughout the world. For one, I am glad that the Senator from Washington has opened this discussion in this public forum.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I should like to be permitted only to say that to my mind—and certainly, speaking for myself, with no pride of authorship at all, as the subject is entirely too serious for that—both the statements, offered in all humility and seriousness, and in hope, too, by the Senator from Wyoming and by the Senator from Washington, are deserving of some consideration and thought by others among our colleagues, by some of those in the executive branch, and by a good many other Americans. If they give rise to questions leading to action that will commit us—if that is the right word—with the help of our allies, many of whom are not yet on board, to win what has been started, what we have begun this afternoon will have been worth while. I have appreciated listening to the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE HERBERT A. MEYER, OF KANSAS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following resolution (H. Res. 868) coming over from the House of Representatives:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
November 27, 1950.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. HERBERT A. MEYER, a Representative from the State of Kansas.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I am profoundly moved by the statements that were made by the distinguished Senator from Washington and the distinguished Senator from Wyoming in the discussion just preceding the important matter which the Chair has laid before the Senate of the United States. It should impress upon all of us the grave responsibility which we have to cooperate, to consider, and to do something about the very serious situation in which, according to press reports, we find ourselves tonight.

Mr. President, I am reminded by the resolution which is now before the Senate that on October 2, 1950, the late HERBERT A. MEYER, Representative from the Third Congressional District of my State, passed away. He served with great distinction and determination and courage in the House of Representatives in the Capital City of the Nation. He enjoyed the respect and confidence of the people of his district and of his State. We regret his untimely passing, and, out of respect for him as a fine, outstanding public character, and as a man, I offer for immediate consideration the resolution which I now send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 364), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. HERBERT A. MEYER, late a Representative from the State of Kansas.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

RECESS

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate do now take a recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, November 29, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1950

(Legislative day of Monday, November 27, 1950)

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, in this troubled time when all mankind stands in the valley of decision, we turn to Thee with hearts that are heavy with anxiety and with grief for the fallen, with minds that are clouded with perplexity and doubt, with spirits that are dismayed by the world's catastrophe. From the tumult of an unhappy world, where desolate lie many cities and multitudes weep in darkness with no consolation, we turn for a hallowed moment to this wayside shrine of Thy grace. Be to us, we pray Thee, not just the God of the altar of prayer but also the companioning presence of our daily lives, facing with us what we face, going with us where we go, sustaining, guiding, correcting, empowering, until our brief day's work is done and sunset comes to find us undishonored, undefeated, and unashamed. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, SEDGWICK COUNTY, KANS.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon a certain claim of the Board of County Commissioners of Sedgwick County, Kans., and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the bill, prepared by me, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Kansas will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 4205) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon a certain claim of the Board of County Commissioners of Sedgwick County, Kans., introduced by Mr. SCHOEPPEL, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The statement presented by Mr. SCHOEPPEL is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR SCHOEPPEL

I have today introduced a bill to enable Sedgwick County, Kans., to sue the United States in the Court of Claims for delinquent taxes assessed against the Boeing airplane manufacturing plant now owned by the United States.

This bill is identical with H. R. 7854 passed by the Eighty-first Congress, second session, except for modifications made to conform to the views expressed by the President in his Memorandum of Disapproval dated September 28, 1950.

The President expressed no disapproval of the main features of the bill permitting Sedgwick County, Kans., to secure a judicial determination in the Court of Claims as to whether the tax assessed against the property involved was lawful, but withheld his approval to the bill because it also permitted the recovery of "penalties, interest, and charges in connection with the taxes levied."

This bill contains no provision for the recovery of penalties, interest, or charges in connection with said taxes, but on the contrary specifically provides "that nothing herein shall be construed as authorizing suit or judgment for interest, penalties, or charges on or in connection with said taxes."

I sincerely hope that this bill will be found to be free from any feature or provision of a controversial or objectionable nature and that it will be approved and passed at the present session in order that the local taxing authorities may have their day in court as to the validity of the taxes involved with the least possible delay.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I send to the desk a joint resolution which provides for extension of the present rent-control law for 2 months. Representative SPENCE has introduced a joint resolution in the House which provides for extension of the law for 3 months. My purpose in introducing the resolution today is so that the Committee on Banking and Currency, which will meet today at 2:30 to consider rent control, will have something tangible before it. I ask that the joint resolution be received and appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be received and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, introduced by Mr. MAYBANK, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

INVESTIGATION OF EXPORT POLICIES AND CONTROL REGULATIONS

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and myself, I submit for appropriate reference a resolution to authorize an investigation of the administration and enforcement by Government agencies of the export policies and control regulations of the United States, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement prepared by me explaining the resolution may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Maryland will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The resolution (S. Res. 365) submitted by Mr. O'CONOR (for himself and Mr. MAGNUSON) was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full, complete, and continuing study and investigation of the administration, execution, and enforcement by Government departments and agencies of the export policies and control regulations of the United States.

Such a study and investigation shall include, but shall not be limited to, a continuing surveillance of the effectiveness of measures and efforts instituted by Government agencies to prevent the shipment or transshipment of exported materials to countries unfriendly to the United States or lack of such measures or efforts. The committee is also directed to ascertain to what extent, if any, American carriers have been and are utilized in such transportation.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report its findings, together with its recommendations for such legislation as it may deem advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-first and Eighty-second Congresses, (1) to make such expenditures as it deems advisable; (2) to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable; and (3) with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of any of the departments or agencies of the Government.

SEC. 4. Expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The statement presented by Mr. O'CONOR is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR O'CONOR

I am submitting for the consideration of the Senate a resolution which would authorize a broad-gaged investigation and review into not only our trade practices, but trade policies concerning Communist-dominated areas of the world.

It is urged that our country should cease absolutely to ship any strategic products or permit transshipment of such products from occupied areas to Communist China and that we should strive to have other nations allied with us throughout the world take appropriate measures to prevent transshipments and leakages of supplies which would be of great assistance to our now openly declared enemies in Korea and North China, as well as to other unfriendly nations.

A preliminary investigation has been conducted by a subcommittee in the matter of shipments of strategic war materials to Communist China and to other Communist countries. An intensive study of the matter since the Congress recessed has developed a number of startling, and I might say, shocking, facts concerning the amount of such critical products which were permitted to go to the Chinese Reds, now fighting our troops so bitterly in Korea. A vastly greater number of leads which it has been impossible to follow, however, due to lack of time and the restricted staff at our disposal, clearly demonstrates the need of a further and much broader inquiry into the whole matter of shipments to enemy countries.

The inquiry as it has developed to date might be said to fall into three patterns. Firstly, there was the matter of shipments directly from this country to North China, sometimes by way of occupied Japan. Secondly, when it seemed that such shipments could well be controlled, the committee found that products from Japan and some of our allies in Europe were getting through to the Chinese Communists in large numbers by means of transshipments, at the port of New York mainly. And finally, huge shipments have been made and are still being made from our ports to Communist China of materials which have not hitherto been officially classed as strategic but which we have reason to believe can be put to military or war industrial uses.

Just a few figures might well indicate the extent of these various shipments. The subcommittee found that shipments to Red China have gone forward in substantial quantities from both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of our country since the Communist forces took over control of the country in September 1949, and even after the Communist-inspired attack on Korea last June 25. Selected at random from among many shipments following the establishment of the Chinese Red regime, was that of nearly 15,000,000 gallons of petroleum products, from the United States or shipped by American oil companies and affiliates from the Middle East. Approximately 5,000,000 gallons of gasoline were included. According to the oil companies, a voluntary agreement at the time of the Korean crisis has stopped further shipments of such products by them. However, early this year and continuing up even until August, oil purchased in the United States to the extent of 734,000 gallons was transported first to Japan and later reshipped to China. From the west coast more than 10,000 tons of steel products consisting of steel plates and other items militarily useful have been shipped to Communist China since the outbreak of the Korean War Petroleum products have gone forward likewise from the west coast ports and tons of rubber scrap, tires and tubes, for all of which the Communist forces can find use.

One of the most startling disclosures of all was the fact that some 4,500,000 pounds of pure copper, produced in Japan, was delivered to Communist China by the devious expedient of shipping it to the United States and then immediately trans-shipping to Communist China. It has been clearly shown that all of these copper shipments left Japan under bills of lading which certified that the copper was destined for New York City. In the case of most of the shipments new post-dated bills of lading were reissued in New York, indicating that the copper was to be transshipped to North China. The shippers undoubtedly were fully informed that no licenses could be secured in Japan to ship this copper directly. Thus, it was quite apparent that there have been violations or at least open evasions of the Japanese export-control laws. For this reason, the entire matter is being referred to SCAP for possible action on the part of the Japanese authorities.

On these two phases of the problem we have made, I feel sure, very distinct progress toward correction and prevention of further shipments. It has been possible to prevent shipment of much of the oil from Japan and from this country destined for North China and also to stop shipment of a number of steel items.

Another vastly more dangerous procedure for getting these critical products to Communist countries developed, relating to transshipments of strategic goods of foreign origin through United States ports. The hearings in the subcommittee revealed that an American company has been purchasing in Britain, France, and Belgium, highly strategic silicon steel sheets and importing this material into the port of New York. It has been ascertained that these strategic materials are then being trans-shipped to North China, although, under present export regulations of this country, it is not possible to ship such steel sheets directly from the United States to Communist China or other Soviet-dominated countries.

I am sure that many of the Members of this distinguished body will be surprised to learn how lenient a view has been taken by the responsible Federal agencies with regard to permitting these materials to get into Communist hands, possibly to be used to spread death and destruction among our own and United Nations forces in Korea.

The grave crisis confronting our troops today did not originate as of yesterday. Rather it is the culmination of a long series of aggressive activities conceived by Communists, pushed forward by Communists, and made possible by Communist-supplied implements of warfare. I say this because the elements are of one vicious stock, whether they are Korean, Chinese, or Russian Communists.

What is happening today could have been expected from a dyed-in-the-wool enemy of liberty and freedom, of democratic institutions, and of decency and ordered government.

It is to be regretted that our officials did not act more decisively and more successfully to prevent strategic supplies from reaching these enemies. The least we can do is to take every precaution to avoid further mistakes. My resolution is introduced to accomplish this purpose.

Communist China's open defiance of the United Nations yesterday makes it absolutely urgent that we discontinue all shipments of supplies of any character from this country which could in any way contribute to military or behind-the-line uses.

The statement by Chinese Envoy Wu before the Security Council that Communist aggression in Korea will never cease until United Nations forces have been driven from the peninsula is nothing short of an open declaration of war on the United States.

To continue allowing her to receive any products which would help to sustain her national economy is unthinkable in a crisis wherein United States forces face one of the gravest threats in all our history.

The further the subcommittee goes into the investigation, the more clear it becomes that for every ton of copper, steel, oil, chemicals, scrap rubber, medicines, or the like that we uncover and prevent from being shipped to China there are countless other tons still finding their way to North China ports.

To continue sacrificing the flower of our Army, Air Force, Navy, and Marines against the endless hordes available to Communist China and its Russian sponsor, while at the same time we or our supposed allies furnish them the very products which help to make it possible for them to continue their aggression, is contrary to all American interests.

WISCONSIN EDITORIAL COMMENT ON NOVEMBER ELECTION

[Mr. WILEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD several editorials from Wisconsin newspapers commenting on the outcome of the November election, which appear in the Appendix.]

STATEHOOD FOR ALASKA

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 331) to provide for the admission of Alaska into the Union.

Mr. McCLELLAN obtained the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me so I may make a short statement in connection with the subject under consideration?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to do so if I do not lose the floor thereby. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Nebraska without losing the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Arkansas may yield to the Senator from Nebraska without losing the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, since making my statement yesterday, I have received a number of telegrams which I think should be incorporated in the RECORD because they bear directly on the subject which is before the Senate.

Before presenting them I should like to say that on checking over the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Monday, I was amazed to discover that the President in his letter to the Vice President regarding the statehood bills made the statement that "the people of Alaska have voted almost 3 to 1 in favor of statehood."

Mr. President, the fact is that the people of Alaska have never done any such thing. Several years ago they voted in favor of the general principle of statehood but by a very narrow margin—58 percent of the total vote of only 16,400. That is less than 3 to 2, not 3 to 1.

Furthermore, this vote was taken only on the principle of statehood, not on whether statehood should be granted immediately and not on this particular bill that is before the Congress. I strongly feel that if a referendum could be held in Alaska on this particular bill now, it might well be defeated. I have been told as much by several distinguished Alaska residents.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point several telegrams I have received from Alaskans protesting against Senate approval of the bill. One telegram is from Emery F. Tobin, editor, the Alaskan Sportsman. Another comes from a prominent editor of the daily newspaper published in Ketchikan, Alaska. Another comes from a prominent citizen of Juneau, Mr. Shattuck. Another comes from Albert White, attorney at law of Juneau. Another comes from Marcus F. Jensen, member of the house of representatives of the nineteenth session, Alaska Territorial Legislature.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KETCHIKAN, ALASKA, November 29, 1950.
Senator HUGH BUTLER,
Senate Office Building:

When referendum held on question "Are you in favor of statehood for Alaska?" 58 percent of 16,400 cast affirmative ballot since most Alaskans in favor eventual statehood but this does not mean they are in favor of statehood now. Would be great mistake Alaska take on responsibilities statehood huge land area small population without any year around industries and supported principally by money coming to Alaska through huge Federal military appropriations. Cost of living here greater than nearly any other place in world as recognized by Federal Government which pays all its employees in Alaska 25 percent cost of living allowance. Statehood now would increase cost of living, bankrupt Territory, drive out most of population.

EMERY F. TOBIN,
Editor, the Alaska Sportsman.

KETCHIKAN, ALASKA, November 28, 1950.
Senator HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senate:

Alaska voters at a general election for territorial offices in October repudiated Gruening-sponsored candidates in all four divisions thereby proving by their ballots they were tired of the political domination exercised by our appointed Governor. The Senate may have justifiable reason for refusing to pass an inadequate statehood bill which, even as amended, offers very little, but we feel the people of the Territory should have the right to elect their own leader if the economy of Alaska is to develop to the point where statehood is feasible. The election of our Governor would be a logical and progressive step for statehood.

SID D. CHARLES.

JUNEAU, ALASKA, November 29, 1950.
Hon. HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

As Juneau businessman and former territorial legislator with 43-year residence in Alaska would like to express my belief that statehood not only cannot be of assistance to country's military defense for reasons already expressed by military experts, but also it almost certain have opposite effect because of its impact on Territorial economy which at present not only unhealthy but actually declining with single exception of centers enjoying military expenditures. Despite assertions that Territory is fiscally healthy and paying its bills the unpublicized fact remains that several millions appropriated by last legislature remain frozen because of inadequate revenues.

CURTIS G. SHATTUCK.

Senator HUGH BUTLER,
Washington, D. C.:

I voted for Alaska statehood bill submitted Alaska voters many years ago condition of this Territory. This time will not support statehood, Army and Navy better position to take care of defenses than any confusion that would exist upon passage this bill. Have just completed 5,000-mile trip over Territory. Am convinced if the referendum for statehood was resubmitted to Alaska people it would not pass. Half Territory voted against it as to districts and why is a referendum vote taken years ago accepted now as a fact in a changing world. I have lived here 40 years and have never seen Alaska in such a economic deplorable condition. No seasonal work, no new ventures in years, no factories. Nothing to keep people employed or steady employment. Gold mines shut down Juneau. Had 900 men working in a gold mine, it's now shut down and 900 working for the Government. I appeal to you to give us a chance to vote again on this measure.

ALBERT WHITE,

DOUGLAS, ALASKA, November 28, 1950.

Hon. HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senator from Nebraska,
Washington, D. C.:

I oppose statehood at this time for these reasons: first, because of additional cost. Maintenance of roads alone would cost an additional four million annually; secondly, statehood will not help Alaska defense as the military program is already in effect; third, the trial vote for State was not a true indication of the peoples' wish as the majority was not versed on the facts; fourth, the administrative actions of our Governor and some of his followers advocating statehood have been such that I believe a State under the influence would be to the detriment of the people I refer you to the activities of the Territorial Banking Board, also the history of the Palmer Airport.

MARCUS F. JENSEN,
Member, House of Representatives, Nineteenth Session, Alaska Territorial Legislature.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Several Senators have asked what the situation might be here for the next hour or hour and a half. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas if he can give us some estimate of how long he is going to speak.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I feel confident I will occupy that much time.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President and my colleagues, it is not with any particular pleasure whatsoever that I take the floor at this time to discuss the pending motion. I regret the necessity for doing so, because there are many other matters of vital importance that should now be engaging the profound interest and attention of the Members of this body. There are a number of domestic problems which are of greater importance and which should take priority over the bill which the pending motion seeks to make the unfinished business.

Yes, Mr. President, I think there are many measures pending in the Congress which are of much more importance and which are of more immediate concern for the welfare of our Republic and the people of the Nation than is the bill to admit another State to the Union. Far more urgency in the interest of our Nation attends some of those measures than attends the action we may take, either adversely or favorably, on the pending motion.

Mr. President, the paramount issue and concern is how best to serve our national defense in this critical period. That is or should be the all-consuming question at this hour in the history of our Nation. It is not whether some Territory should now be annexed as a State, but how can we defend America? What are we going to do in the present international crisis? Whether we like to talk about it or not, and whether or not we dare to be realistic about it, Mr. President, our Nation is in war. No one would dare refer to the Korean conflict again as a mere police action. That technical term may be applied to the situation in areas that are threatened in other parts of the world, but most recent developments and the news that is coming over the wires while I am speaking now clearly refute that the action which is taking place in Korea is a mere police action.

Whether it is the preliminary to a third world war, I do not have the answer. So far as I can ascertain, Mr. President, no one in this Government, no one in a high, responsible position of authority in this Government, has been able thus far to declare definitely what this situation is and whether it means that a third world war has begun. We have been doing a great deal of wishful thinking about it. We have tried to brush off facts and realities by wishful thinking, hoping and trying to have faith that something can be worked out, that a solution can be found, and that another world catastrophe can and will be averted. But, Mr. President, I said recently in addresses down-State that it would take a twentieth-century Solomon to interpret correctly and analyze world conditions today and make predictions with reference to the future. I also said in speeches that I recently made in my State that there are no twentieth-century Solomons in the Government in Washington. Day by day, events reveal and confirm the soundness and accuracy of that statement.

Mr. President, what I am saying is not critical of the President of the United States, of any member of his Cabinet, of our military authorities, or of anyone else in a position of responsibility. What I am simply pointing out is that the gravity of the situation is such and the perplexities of it are such that all of us are confused; we cannot see far enough ahead to be able to make plans based upon known facts and reasonable anticipations of what the future may bring.

I am convinced that the present situation is indicative of another all-out war. There is more in the record of past events and of developments up to the present time to indicate that the forces of evil and of aggression and of conquest are bent upon a war of destruction on the forces of freedom and the peoples who love liberty. I say there is more in present revelations to indicate that than there is to suggest that we may safely rely upon any expectation that we are going to find an immediate solution to the war we now are fighting.

Mr. President, I make those statements because I know the high hopes we entertained as a Nation and as a people when the United Nations was created in 1945. We believed then that the peoples of the world were war-weary and tired, that they definitely wanted to find a way to a lasting peace, a peace that would endure, a peace that would give large measure of assurances, at least, if not absolute assurance, that all nations could live in peace and security, without fear of war and danger of being attacked, without any apprehensions that there were forces plotting their destruction and conquest.

I still believe that the peoples of the earth—all peoples, generally speaking—entertain those hopes and desire permanent peace. However, and unfortunately, Mr. President, the rulers of some of those peoples, who are now in position and power—which position and power was obtained by force and which is retained by force, and not by the free will and consent of those peoples—have seized upon the chaotic condition of the world as the opportune time to force their philosophy and ideology upon other people and to resort to every device dishonorable in character to overpower the will of the peoples of other nations and by the pressure of coercion, intimidation, and threats to bring other governments under their ruthless domination and control. Mr. President, Russia has made considerable progress along that line. She has gone beyond mere intimidation of weaker nations. She has compelled them to submit to her dictation and domination with reference to the character of government they shall have and in compelling their rulers to be obedient to her will. She has gone beyond that, Mr. President. For the past 5 years she has studiedly and systematically pursued a course of antagonism, of harassment, and of repeated insults to all the civilized nations of the world, including our own, and has persisted in a cold war that has kept up a disturbance of such magnitude that even the United Nations has been unable to cope with it. Instead of relenting in those policies they are today being intensified, while the war continues and rages with increasing fury and mounting casualties. If we are not going to be realistic, if we are not going to face facts, if we are not going to be cognizant of that which is so apparent that the blind may see, we shall surely stumble on down the road of wishful thinking, with false hopes that everything will finally work out all right.

I want to be guarded in my remarks, but I may say that I fully believe that what is happening in Korea was inspired by communistic Russia. I think the directing power back of the tragic and unnecessary war which is now in progress lies in the seat of the Russian Government, a government which is a member of the United Nations, a government which gave its pledge which we hoped at the time was given in good faith, as evidenced by that government subscribing to and becoming a member of the United Nations—that she genuinely wanted peace and wanted peaceful solution of the problems which faced the postwar period. But an analysis of the conduct of that government since the United Nations was created compels the conclusion which I think is irrefutable, that that government has not wanted peace. Instead, it has done everything in its power, even to the extent of using some 46 times to date the veto power which it possesses as a member of the United Nations, in order to obstruct any progress toward peace. Its conduct in the United Nations simply has been a continuous effort to sabotage the noble purpose, program, and efforts of that body to bring tranquillity and order out of the chaos, distress, and suffering which followed in the wake of World War II.

That is not the only concrete evidence we have of what that country has in mind. We were acting in good faith, as usual, after the United Nations was created. We brought our boys home. We practically demobilized our forces in the various countries in which we had fought. We left behind only a token police force for occupation purposes, until order could be restored and peace treaties written and agreed to. We were acting in good faith. Not only did we demobilize our foreign forces, not only did we strip ourselves of our potential and actual war power on the battlefields of World War II, but, after we brought our troops home, we again virtually disarmed, as we did after World War I, as further evidence of our good faith and of our high purpose and intent to support the United Nations and, through that tribunal and through those channels, by peaceful negotiation and by all other peaceful means, to bring about a solution of postwar problems and controversies and to achieve the peace which has always been our hope and the aspirations of our people.

But, Mr. President, Russia has not pursued such policies. Instead, not only has she blocked every sincere effort of the United Nations, to whose Charter and purposes she had subscribed, by using the veto power in an effort to sabotage that institution and render it impotent with respect to critical and vital problems which need solution for the sake of humanity and for the peace of the world, but instead of disarming and cooperation with the United Nations and showing her good faith, she has, since the United Nations was created, feverishly and continuously prepared for war. Today she is far better prepared for war, both on offense and on defense, than she was on VJ-day.

Mr. President, what does that mean? What is its significance? Is she preparing for a war of defense? No one could argue that she is. Who is about to attack her? None of her neighbors on either continent is sufficiently prepared even to constitute a minor threat to her security and sovereignty. There must be, then, some other reason for preparing. I know of no nation that might want to attack her. I know of none that threatens. I know of none that has indicated that there was ever any contemplation of raising an issue with her which could possibly lead to war even in the distant future.

Then why this preparation? The answer is that she is preparing for aggression; it is preparation for conquest. It is not preparation for defense, but for the purpose of enabling her, by resort to force, to carry out her designs, first, upon the weaker nations, as she has been doing ever since the end of World War II, and in the hope of building such strength, such might, and military power that, secondly, whenever the propitious time comes, she can achieve her ambition of world conquest.

Mr. President, I have referred to this subject as a preface to my remarks today simply to emphasize what I consider the unjustifiable and unreasonable course we are attempting to pursue in the Senate in this critical period. The bill which it is proposed to bring before us could not possibly, if enacted into law, contribute anything in strength or effort to our immediate national defense. It may be argued, and it is argued, that ultimately such action would contribute to the national defense. But the point I make is that rather than spend time today on a highly controversial measure which, if enacted into law, could not contribute to the solution of the vital problems of the hour, the Congress should be considering the strengthening of our national defense. If no bill pertaining to national defense is ready for immediate consideration on this floor, our committees should conduct hearings and consider legislation to strengthen our defenses in order to deal with the crisis which now confronts us.

Mr. President, it is necessary that we pass additional appropriations. The Appropriations Committee could well devote time to the careful consideration of recommendations which will be submitted to us, because in time of war, or preparation for war, there is great waste of economic resources, as well as finances. With a national debt which is approaching and will soon reach the three hundred billion mark it behooves Congress as never before to scrutinize every request for expenditure of public funds and to bestir itself to a degree as never before to eliminate all unnecessary expenditures. Congress should concentrate on expenditures for the things which should have priority and which are indispensable to meet the present crisis. Our committees could well spend the time in determining what kind of new tax bill Congress should enact.

Taxes must go higher. In the present distressing situation I think every intelligent American will agree that taxes must be increased to a point somewhere below the border line where if they were increased any more they would bring about diminishing returns, where if they were increased any more they would destroy private initiative and destroy the incentive of the individual and of business to produce. Those are the problems—and they are not easy ones—that Congress should be trying to solve. I do not mean to say that we should pass such legislation during this brief session of Congress between now and the time that the new Congress convenes in January. However, a great deal of progress could be made in holding hearings and in developing information which properly should be developed before final decisions are made.

I should like to refer to a bill which I have in mind. I had hoped that hearings could be held on the measure during this short session. However, if our time is to be consumed on more or less extraneous issues which are highly controversial, and we are not to be given the opportunity to concentrate on problems which should have priority, it will be difficult to conduct committee hearings and lay the groundwork required to enable us to legislate intelligently on such problems. The bill to which I refer is S. 2898, to amend the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 to provide for more effective evaluation of the fiscal requirements of the executive agencies of the Government of the United States. I introduced the bill in January 1950. I do not intend to discuss the bill. I wish merely to make reference to it as one measure which should be considered by Congress. Perhaps it is not the perfect answer to the problem involved, but it is one measure which Congress might profitably be considering at this time.

The bill proposes to set up a joint budget committee of the House and Senate to help process the budget, which at the present time is primarily the function and responsibility of the executive branch of the Government. Having served for 2 years as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I can appreciate the difficulties the committee faces in trying to report appropriations for various departments and agencies. As a rule, the committee has before it for consideration only the statements, requests, and evidence of the department which is interested in obtaining and spending the appropriation. The committee hears only the persons who are at the head of those departments. They come to us and say it takes a certain amount of money to run their agency and enable it to do its work. However intelligent and capable members of the Committee on Appropriations may be, because of other duties and responsibilities as Senators they do not have either the time or the facilities at their command to investigate requests and to sift out and eliminate many unnecessary items. Instead, every year we go along and accept the ex parte evidence of the agencies concerned. We accept the evidence of the persons who are asking for the money. We do so without making any check whatever into the agency or into the function of it to determine whether the funds requested are needed, or whether the system under which they are operating could be revised so as to enable them to operate more economically.

Mr. President, such things are vital in this crisis. In times of high prosperity, in times when the Government is able to operate on a balanced budget, and in times when no extraordinary demands are made on our country we may coast along with a reasonable measure of safety. However, in times of crisis, particularly if it comes to the worst—and we had better think in terms of the worst—we should wisely legislate with respect to our national resources and fiscal policies. We had better legislate in anticipation of the worst for the present if we are to be prepared and to have the maximum strength to meet the challenge head-on if and when it comes. Legislation of this character is more important at this hour than a bill to admit a Territory as a State, particularly when the issue is highly controversial. I daresay no Member of the Senate can develop a factual case to show that the Territory, if admitted as a State, would be self-sustaining from a financial standpoint.

I expect to speak on Senate bill 2898 in a day or two and shall endeavor to point the way we should approach the problem. If such a committee were created, it would be staffed, as the Committee on Appropriations is staffed, probably with the same number of Senators, or perhaps with a larger number, if necessary. Through such a committee we would be able to check requests submitted to the Bureau of the Budget and by it to the Congress. Today we are unable to do so. We must take the word of the representatives of the agency or department. When they come to us with a budget recommendation, it is usually sufficient to get an appropriation. We make little or no investigation into the facts. The bill to which I refer would create a committee which would make such a check. The bill would require the heads of the various agencies, as they submitted their budget requests to the Bureau of the Budget, to submit copies of the requests to the proposed joint budget committee. Such procedure would make it possible for the committee and the staff of the committee to study the budget as it was being developed and processed. In that way, when the budget was presented and various agencies made their requests of the Committee on Appropriations, we would have some means of knowing whether the funds requested were actually needed. As it is today, to a large extent, we appropriate blindly.

Mr. President, I wish now to address myself to the pending motion. There are many measures we could discuss, but I have simply attempted to point out in what I have said that with the conditions of the world today and the confusion which is confounded in Washington at this hour we should be trying to solve problems of national defense instead of consuming the time of the Senate and of the Congress with measures which are controversial and which, if enacted, would contribute nothing in the distressing emergency with which we are now confronted.

Mr. President, I wish to say at the outset that I am not unalterably opposed to statehood for Alaska. Frankly, I shall look forward to the time when Alaska may qualify for statehood. I think she has potentialities, and I think it is highly probable that in the course of time—and I should like to see the time hastened—Alaska may become sufficiently developed, sufficiently populated, considering the area it occupies, strong enough financially, with such developed physical resources, that she could support statehood adequately, and thus become the forty-ninth State of the Union.

As I see the situation, Alaska has not yet matured sufficiently to accept the responsibilities which statehood would impose. As I see the situation, it is very much like placing a 10-ton load on a 1-ton-horsepower motor. I do not believe Alaska can pull the load. I do not believe she has the adequate strength, or has developed resources from which she could collect taxes out of the income of her people adequately to support a State government.

I do not believe that statehood is a right of any Territory. Statehood is a privilege, which under our Constitution, is bestowed. Statehood is something Congress would be asked to bestow, and I believe that before any Territory is admitted into the Union as a State, it should have earned its admission.

There are some factors which should go into the determination of whether Alaska has earned this right, and the principal factor I shall discuss, the principal reason I assign for the position I take in opposition to the bill, and also to its consideration at this time, is the fact that Alaska has not yet developed her natural resources to such a point that she can accept the responsibilities of statehood. The income of her people as yet is not sufficient to support the costs of State government.

Therefore, Mr. President, until there has been such further development of Alaska, such further growth, that she can be self-sustaining, I do not believe statehood should be granted.

I have not made as thorough a study of this subject as I should like to make, but I desire to place in the RECORD the basic facts with reference to Alaska. So far as I know, this statement of the facts is substantially accurate. The information as to most of them comes from the Library of Congress. As I develop the facts for the RECORD, I shall make some comments upon them, and point out wherein I think there is yet lacking in Alaska the development and the progress which is essential to warrant the Federal Government in bestowing statehood upon that Territory.

The Territory of Alaska was created by act of Congress of August 24, 1912. The government established under that act consists of a two-house legislature. The representatives in that body are elected for a term of 2 years and the senators are elected for a term of 4 years. The legislature meets biennially in odd-numbered years, and for a period not to exceed 60 days, to legislate on Territorial matters, to adopt the Territorial budget, and to pass on the governor's appointments.

Mr. President, it is argued that the people of Alaska should be granted freedom, that they should be admitted into the Union. It is stated that they are being deprived of a right. The Federal Government, however, is not ruling over them in the sense that that word is ordinarily used. We have granted to them the right to select their representative, to make their own laws, so long as they are not inconsistent with the Federal laws and with the Federal Constitution. Even if they were admitted to statehood they would have to conform to the basic law of the land in their self-government.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. It is true, is it not, that they do not have the right to elect their own governor at the present time?

Mr. McCLELLAN. They do not have the right at the present time to elect their own governor. So far as I know, that is the only distinction.

Mr. LANGER. Is it not true that time after time during the years in which the United States has had control of Alaska as a Territory, men have been appointed to be governors who were not even citizens of the Territory?

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator is no doubt better informed about that than I am. I may say, however, that I think that is something which could be corrected. But when we are asked to admit Alaska to statehood we can point out a number of things. I might cite an instance which I think may be developed before the debate is concluded. If Alaska had a State government I think the Senator from North Dakota himself would agree that the present government is greatly deficient.

I am pointing out that the people of Alaska are not being deprived of all rights of free peoples in any sense. At the same time we must remember also that, while it is true that the United States appoints a man to be governor of Alaska, we also have the responsibility of protecting Alaska.

Mr. President, at the beginning of my remarks I said that the time may come when Alaska can be admitted as a State, when she shall have developed sufficiently so she can accept the responsibilities of statehood, and not come into the Union as a dependent but as a contributor to the strength of our Nation.

The Governor and the Secretary of Alaska are appointed for 4-year terms by the President of the United States, subject to confirmation by the United States Senate. The executive power is vested in the governor, and he may veto bills presented for his signature within 3 days after they are passed. The legislature may override the veto by a two-thirds vote of each House. That shows that the Territorial government is not only patterned after the system of our Federal Government but the system of government of many States of the Union. That is something which is very commendable, Mr. President. It shows that in that regard the people of Alaska are on the right track, that they are making the right approach, that they are gaining experience in how to carry on and to operate a government, in how to become self-confident and self-reliant and competent. Mr. President, the progress which has been made thus far is indeed commendable.

Within the framework of the Territorial government are departments of health, education, welfare, agriculture, labor, taxation, aviation development, communications, highways, and highway patrols. All those things are indications of the progress the people of Alaska are making in self-government. The people are to be commended for this progress. It is a good sign, it is a good omen that they are on their way to greater strength and to ability and capacity for statehood.

Other offices such as those of attorney general, treasurer, and auditor are also represented. Territorial functions are maintained by the Territory itself which currently expends approximately $9,200,000 annually and collects yearly revenue of $10,000,000 from taxes on incomes, property, liquor, motor fuel, and business enterprises.

Mr. President, I have not, of course, checked the figures and information disclosed to the Senate by the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] yesterday when he pointed out that Alaska today is in rather serious financial difficulties, that appropriations are frozen because there is no money to meet them. I do not know when that situation developed, but if the people of Alaska cannot support the Territorial government—and the cost of State government would probably be more than double the cost of the territorial government—it should be a warning to us to proceed with caution with respect to the proposal to admit Alaska to statehood, until we can explore into these things and determine if she does have the financial capacity and the developed resource capacity that would enable her to sustain a State government.

The Federal Government pays the salaries of the Presidentially appointed officials and of the legislature of the Territory. We are paying that. If Alaska were to become a State, that would be additional cost to the people of Alaska.

If Alaska were to be admitted as a State and thus could participate in many of the aid programs such as now exist, under which the State and the Federal Government provide aid, she would have to find a source of substantially additional income in order to exercise her right as a State in acquiring her share of Federal money. I think it is perfectly obvious from the facts and figures which have already been submitted for the RECORD, that as a Territory Alaska is receiving far greater benefits now from the Federal Government than she would receive if she were admitted to statehood and if she came under the same terms and had to qualify for such aid as do other States of the Union.

The Division of Territories and Insular Possessions of the United States Department of the Interior has jurisdiction over most of the Federal enterprises of Alaska. These include the Alaska Railroad, the Alaska Rural Rehabilitation Corporation, and the Alaska Road Commission.

Mr. President, it has also been pointed out by the able senior Senator from Nebraska, particularly in his minority views on the bill, and also on the floor of the Senate yesterday, that possibly what we should do first to help Alaska is to remove many restrictive controls we are exercising over her resources at the present time.

If we want to help Alaska, the mere granting to her of statehood may not be at all the proper way to proceed. We should look into those things that it is at least charged have restricted her growth, and which hamper her development as a Territory because of their effect on the development of the natural resources she possesses.

Mr. President, I do not have any prejudice against admitting Alaska as a State. I do not want anything I may say to be interpreted on that basis at all. But I do say that if and when she is sufficiently developed so she can take her place as a State, can support herself and sustain herself in that capacity and accept her responsibility to the Nation, and her corresponding responsibility to the States of the Nation, then my voice shall not be raised against her admission.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. STENNIS. The Senator understands, of course, that the people of Alaska do not have the privilege of electing their Governor.

Mr. McCLELLAN. They do not have that privilege.

Mr. STENNIS. The Governor is appointed. Does not the Senator believe it would be a forward step if the people of Alaska were permitted to exercise the right of electing their executive?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will say to the able Senator from Mississippi that before he came on the floor the distinguished senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] raised the question respecting the people of Alaska not having the right to elect their Governor. I would not want to make an irrevocable decision on that subject at this moment without further study of it. However, it seems to me that that question is certain worthy of our consideration, and as a prerequisite to the granting of statehood possibly we should give the people of Alaska that further responsibility and opportunity. Thus, they could experience such responsibility, before being admitted as a State, rather than throwing that burden or that responsibility upon them all at once.

The point I am making is simply that from a financial standpoint, from the standpoint of development of resources, from the standpoint of the potential power to obtain revenues sufficient to support a State government, Alaska, as I see it, simply has not yet developed to that extent. I do not believe it would be a great favor to the people of the Territory to admit Alaska to statehood before it has reached such maturity of development and experience as to be competent to make the progress which we would naturally expect her to make under statehood.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. STENNIS. As the Senator knows, the junior Senator from Mississippi is not a member of the committee which considered this bill, nor is the Senator from Arkansas, of course. However, does the Senator from Arkansas have information about the operation of county government in Alaska? In Alaska, is the county unit system very well developed? Does the Senator know about that?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not have full information about that, but I have reason to doubt that there has been such development. I have reasons for making that statement, but I shall not take time to discuss them now because I think possibly one phase of that subject will be discussed by another Senator who is better prepared than am I to discuss that particular subject.

The point is that, as I recall, approximately 28 Territories have been admitted into the Union as States since the founding of our Republic; but in that process we have proceeded with caution. We have not simply said, "You ought to be a State," and then granted statehood or imposed statehood upon them. To the contrary, we have given them an opportunity to progress, to develop, to gain experience.

Of course, Alaska has made some progress; and at the beginning of my remarks I said that I wish to see Alaska continue to progress and develop and to acquire sufficient strength to warrant our admitting Alaska into the Union as a State and to enable Alaska to move forward as a State of the Union, not only for her own benefit, but so that she can actually make a contribution to the strength of the Nation when she is so admitted.

The movement for Alaskan statehood dates from 1915. In that year there was introduced in the Alaska Legislature a bill requesting statehood. In the following year the Alaska Delegate to Congress, Judge James Wickersham, presented the first proposal in Congress to permit the Territory to become a State. Considerable interest was aroused at that time by that movement, but no action was taken.

Then, apparently, there was no further insistence upon it until about 1931. At each succeeding Congress after that, statehood measures were introduced by former Delegate Dimond, of Alaska, and by the present Delegate, Hon. EDWARD L. BARTLETT.

It appears that little serious consideration had been given to any of those proposals until after the close of World War

II. At that time the movement for statehood for Alaska was greatly intensified because of the economic and population growth which had taken place in Alaska during the war. At this point, Mr. President, let me make a further comment in regard to the growth in population which occurred during the war. If growth in population is the only criterion for statehood, then there are many islands which had a tremendous growth in population during the war because our forces occupied them.

To what has the growth of Alaska been due? It has not been due to the development of her natural resources or to a development which is a continuing process of productiveness; but it has been simply a growth arising out of the Treasury of the United States of America. That is all it has been and that is all it is. There is no indication that there has been any great development of her natural resources which could provide and continue as a source of revenue, a continuing source of State income or Territorial income. The source of Alaska's growth is entirely attributable to the expenditure of Federal moneys in the Territory for national defense purposes. Of course there can be a boom in any town if the Federal Government is engaging there in such activities or operations; but when an Army camp in such a town is closed down, and if that town does not have sufficient industry or farming activity or mining activity or some other type of activity to support it, the previous growth in population and growth in income evaporate, and the town is back to where it was before that growth occurred.

That is exactly what would happen to Alaska today, apparently, judging from facts which already have been disclosed in the course of this discussion. If Federal expenditures in Alaska were cut off, the Territory would revert to its former state, and would not advance.

I assume that the present prospects, at least, are that the Federal expenditures may continue, and they may even be accelerated and increased. However, those expenditures alone do not justify granting statehood to Alaska. The growth of the economy of the Territory itself and within itself should be the determining factor, not how much money the Federal Government may be spending there temporarily or even indefinitely.

As I said a moment ago, in 1931 the movement for statehood was intensified because of this growth.

The first reactions were those of resistance, as in 1931. Obviously the movement was then resisted. I do not think a vote was had on any of those measures.

In 1944 one of the greatest self-styled liberals in this country—a man who is proud of that title, I think, and boasts of the fact that he is a great liberal—submitted a report on this question. In 1944 Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes submitted to the House Committee on Territories a report stating that "for several reasons I believe that statehood would not be appropriate at this time."

Mr. President, I agree with that statement. The statement was made by Mr. Ickes 6 years ago, but I do not know of anything which has substantially changed the situation since then.

Mr. Ickes' reason for making that statement was primarily that the Alaska statehood bill then pending in Congress, H. R. 3768, would grant Alaska all public property and all vacant and unappropriated lands. Secretary Ickes felt that exploitation would be the result of such a move, and that "the most inevitable result would be the failure to enact a long-range program to conserve the natural wealth of the Territory."

As a result of that criticism the bills subsequently introduced have provided for a smaller grant of land to the new State.

Mr. President, there is some line of equity with respect to what should be granted to a new State and what should be retained by the Federal Government. Whether that has been thought out in connection with this particular bill I am not prepared to say, inasmuch as I am not a member of the committee and I was not privileged to attend the hearings. However, there is great dissatisfaction on the part of certain groups of persons in Alaska with respect to certain provisions of the bill. As I recall, the section complained about is either section 5 or section 5 (a). Protests are being received about it. Mr. President, if the bill should become law in its present form, it would not meet with favor among large segments of the Alaskan people, particularly the Alaskan Indians.

The Alaskan Territorial Legislature, meeting in 1945, authorized a referendum on the question of statehood. The vote on that issue occurred at the general election on October 8, 1946, with 9,630 voting in favor of statehood and 6,822 voting against it. The most populous divisions were strongly in favor of the proposal. The two northern divisions, however, reported slight majorities against statehood.

Mr. President, I do not know what the situation in that respect is at the present time; I do not know how the people of Alaska would vote on that issue today. Yesterday I heard the able, distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] say that, according to information which he had, if the vote were taken today, the people of Alaska would be about equally divided on that issue.

Be that as it may, Mr. President, it is perfectly obvious that there was not a strong, overwhelming sentiment in Alaska in 1946 in favor of statehood. I do not know just how elections are held in Alaska, but I know that politics are somewhat the same wherever free elections are held. I can well appreciate that Federal employees in Alaska and others who are interested made every effort to secure a tremendous vote in favor of the proposal. I do not say that the fact that 6,822 voted against it is a necessary indication that they should not have it; but I merely point out that certainly the sentiment was not overwhelming for statehood.

So, Mr. President, why the hurry? Let us allow events to take their course. Let us allow the situation to develop further. Let us make no mistake. We are not merely enacting a law when we pass this bill. We are going far beyond that. We are making an irrevocable committal. We cannot change it. An ordinary law which we enact today regulating some matter in this country may be repealed tomorrow or at the next session of the Congress, if we find that we have made a mistake; but there is no repeal, no recourse, if we admit a Territory to statehood in the Union when that Territory is not financially able and when its resources are not sufficiently developed to make it self-sustaining and to give it the capacity to function as a State. So, Mr. President, there is no big hurry for this action.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WATKINS. I invite the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the fact that this morning I received a letter from a representative of practically all the Indian tribes in Alaska. The gentleman stated that at a meeting held very recently by the Indians they decided unanimously against statehood, whereas some time before that they had voted almost unanimously in favor of it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. They had voted for it. I appreciate the Senator's contribution. As I recall the occasion, they voted unanimously against statehood immediately following a 2- or 3-hour speech by Governor Gruening in which he tried to persuade them to vote for it.

Mr. WATKINS. I note that the Senator has had the same instances called to his attention that had come to my attention. I wondered whether the Senator had heard of them.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I had heard of the report. I cannot vouch for it, but I assume that the information is correct. But it merely emphasizes the point which I am trying to make. Why, in a world crisis such as exists at this moment, do we have brought before us such legislation as this, when we should be working, if not in open session, at least in committees, on appropriations and other subjects of legislation which might in some way contribute to solving the distressing problems which are involved in the present world crisis? This proposal will not solve anything. We can make a mistake by acting hastily. We can make a mistake by imposing the burdens and obligations of statehood on a Territory and on a people who have not yet developed the strength necessary to carry those burdens.

The first hearings on the question of statehood for Alaska were held by the House Committee on Public Lands during the Eightieth Congress. The hearings were held in April 1947, only 3 years ago. It was as late as 3 years ago before any public hearings were ever held upon this question. There is no demand and no necessity for hasty action on our part to create another State in the Union without proper consideration of the subject. We ought to proceed judiciously. We ought to be convinced. Sometimes it is necessary for us to vote on bills when we may entertain some doubt about them—bills of importance—bills which are necessary to meet the exigencies of a given situation. Under such circumstances perhaps we may not have time to investigate thoroughly or to inform ourselves fully and adequately in order that we may come to the right decision. But we can do that with respect to this measure, and it will be much better for the people of Alaska and for our Nation if we act judiciously and prudently and come to a correct decision before admitting the Territory to statehood.

At the conclusion of the hearings in 1947 it was decided to conduct hearings in Alaska. Hearings were held in Alaska during the months of August and September, 1947, at Anchorage, Seward, Fairbanks, Nome, Kodiak, Cordova, Juneau, Point Barrow, Ketchikan, Petersburg, and Wrangell. In spite of these extensive hearings, no further action was taken, and the proposal died in the Eightieth Congress.

I do not know, but I assume that if those hearings had justified immediate action, if they had revealed beyond peradventure of doubt that Alaska had developed to the point where she had the capacity to assume the responsibilities of statehood, the Congress certainly would have undertaken to process the legislation to enactment.

On the convening of the Eighty-first Congress, Delegate BARTLETT introduced House bill 331. That bill is now the subject of a motion to make it the unfinished business of the Senate. The bill was reported to the House of Representatives following brief hearings held on March 4 and 8, 1949—only 2 days of hearings. The bill was debated in the House of Representatives on March 3, 1950, and was passed by a vote of 186 to 146. So the sentiment in the House of Representatives is not overwhelming in favor of the bill. I believe that more than a hundred Representatives did not vote on that day. In other words, the bill did not receive a majority vote of the membership of the House. For all practical purposes, the legal effect is the same as if it had. It did receive a majority of those present and voting, a quorum being present.

In the Senate the bill was referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, which held public hearings during April 1950, and which then met in executive session for more than 2 weeks for the purpose of ironing out differences in the light of facts adduced at the hearings. The question has not been an election issue, since both major political parties incorporated the proposal into their campaign platforms. I have sometimes heard the argument made on the floor of the Senate that a platform provision is binding upon members of a political party. I find nothing in the Constitution of the United States which says that. I find nothing in the laws of the land which says it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Mexico for a question?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. Would the Senator find anything in the conscience of a man who participated in the convention which adopted such a platform provision that would bind him?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I do not believe so. I appreciate the Senator's contribution. I was about to speak of that point next.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the Senator mean that a man who had been in a convention which declared for statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, and who had voted for the platform pledge, would not be bound in any way to live up to it?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. The man who voted for it would. The man who did not vote for it would not.

Mr. ANDERSON. Then, if the Senator were present in the convention and did not vote against that part of the platform, he would be bound by it, would he not?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. He would have no opportunity to vote against that part of the platform separately, as the able Senator knows.

Mr. ANDERSON. But if he voted for it, then it would be the conviction of the Senator from Arkansas that he would be obligated to carry out his solemn pledge, would it not?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. If he voted for the provision, yes. But I have had no opportunity to vote for or against the provision itself. As the able Senator knows, not only with respect to political platforms, but in connection with legislation, it is necessary to take the good with the bad, to weigh one factor against another. One supports the platform as a whole, although he may violently disagree with certain of its provisions. I will say to the able Senator that I disagreed with the platform of my party in other respects.

Mr. ANDERSON. But was there not a separate vote on each of the other questions?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. That may be true, but that vote does not bind me. I do not know whether or not the Senator surrenders his convictions when he goes to a convention. I do not. I say that for the RECORD. I will say it elsewhere. I think every informed citizen of the State which I represent knows that I do not surrender my convictions merely because some party machinery may happen to cause certain things to be written into a platform. I hope the day will never come when the United States Senate and the House of Representatives are composed of men who will surrender their convictions merely for the sake of party politics.

The tradition of self-government and self-determination has played an important part in the development of the United States. As I have said, I am glad to see that we have granted to Alaska the right to have a Territorial government. As has been suggested on the floor of the Senate, the question of granting to the Territory of Alaska the right to elect its own Governor from among its citizens, is worthy of our consideration. I should not want to make an irrevocable committal on the question until I have had an opportunity to further study it, but it might be well to grant even such further right to the people of Alaska, in order to give them the opportunity to gain greater political wisdom and strength in the administration of democracy in their Territory. As they showed growth, development, and capacity so to govern themselves, it would strongly recommend them for statehood. Such consideration should be considered with other considerations which cannot be cast aside, such as financial capacity to support a State government.

Article IV, section 3, of the Constitution provides:

> New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union.

Mr. President, the Constitution says "may be admitted." No obligation exists to take in as a State any Territory which we may acquire. No binding obligation exists. There may exist what could be referred to as a moral obligation to do so if and when a Territory so developed and progressed that it could accept the responsibility of statehood and could make a contribution toward strengthening the Union. Under the constitutional provision to which I have referred Congress has admitted into the Union 35 States since our Government was established. Of the 35 States, 28 were admitted from a Territorial status. Alaska and Hawaii are the only remaining incorporated Territories which have not been admitted to statehood.

Mr. President, I shall not attempt to discuss Hawaii today. I am not sufficiently prepared to discuss the question of statehood for Hawaii. It is not the immediate issue, although it is a part of the program of proposed admission of both Territories into the Union. However, it is not the issue before the Senate today.

Proponents of statehood for Alaska argue that Alaska bears the same relationship to the United States as previous Territories bore, and that further delay would mean a denial of her rights.

If we go to the record I think we can find instances of a number of States which were Territories for a longer period of time than Alaska has been a Territory.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. Would the Senator name one such Territory.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I shall try to do so for the RECORD before I conclude my remarks. I think I can do so. If I am mistaken I am glad to be corrected, but that is my impression at the moment.

Although the organic acts of Alaska and Hawaii do not refer to statehood explicitly, advocates point out that they extend the Constitution to those Territories, thereby establishing potential eligibility for statehood. They do have potential eligibility for statehood, and it is such potential which I trust will be achieved before they are admitted. Until they have reached such potential eligibility, statehood should be denied to them. I do not believe statehood should be granted to any Territory until it has become sufficiently inhabited, until its resources have been sufficiently explored, until it has sufficiently established commerce, industry, and agricultural pursuits, and unitl its productive capacity will permit sufficient taxation to support a State government. Until it has achieved such potential—and I assert Alaska has such potentiality—it is not eligible for statehood.

Opponents of the proposal take the position that the claim of Alaska to statehood is not a constitutional right. That is the position I take. The Constitution says "may." The Constitution does not guarantee statehood. The Constitution leaves the decision to the discretion of Congress, as the legislative body of our Government. Congress is empowered to pass on the question. It is empowered to grant admission. It is within the discretion of Congress to refuse statehood under any conditions that it may determine justify such refusal.

However, Mr. President, I do not subscribe to the view, if anyone entertains the view, that, irrespective of reaching eligible potentiality no Territory should be admitted. As I have tried to express, I feel that if and when Alaska has so developed that it can assume the responsibilities and obligations of statehood, her claim for admission into the Union should merit consideration. During debate on the floor of the House of Representatives on March 3 of this year Representative COOLEY, of North Carolina, stated:

> It is easy to see if this is done—

He refers to taking the position that all Territories should ultimately be admitted into the Union as States—> that by the same persuasive arguments we may next month or next year be called upon to grant statehood to Puerto Rico and even perhaps to the Virgin Islands, or we might be asked to grant statehood to the islands of Guam and Okinawa. * * * We are playing with the very destiny of our Nation and with the future of this great Union.

Mr. President, I do not think that admitting Alaska to the Union would place any binding obligation upon us to admit Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or any Territory into the Union. I do not think such obligation would be created at all. However, if we admitted Alaska into the Union, it would encourage and invite other Territories to make similar claims and insist that they should be accorded, as they would say, the same treatment and consideration which were accorded Alaska. Of course such claims would not be so strong, and certainly they would not have the persuasion with me, as does the request to grant statehood to Alaska. However, it would be said, "Well, you did this for Alaska. We want to be treated the same way. We want the same privilege accorded to us."

No clear specifications exist to determine when and if a Territory is ready for admission as a State. Therefore, Mr. President, when these bills come up, the fact that we have admitted 28 Territories into the Union should not be the decisive factor. No definite criterion exists. We must consider each Territory on its own merits. We must weigh its qualifications and determine its capacity to be self-sustaining. We should consider whether a Territory, if admitted as a State, would become a further liability upon the Federal Government, or whether it could contribute to the strength of the Republic, not only economically, but politically and militarily. Certainly I cannot see that any great strength could be contributed militarily by admitting Alaska into the Union. The fact is that we have the responsibility of defending Alaska, and we are going to defend her.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. STENNIS. No doubt the Senator has seen many statements to the effect that admitting Alaska as a State would strengthen our military defenses, or strengthen our Nation militarily. Has the Senator ever heard any military officer, although I will not ask the Senator to name him, or any man he considered having knowledge of military science and skill, point out definitely that it would help us in strengthening our defenses to allow Alaska to be a State as contrasted to a Territory?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have not heard any such statement. There may be a general statement in the RECORD to that effect, which I think has been referred to during the debate, but there was also the statement from another able naval authority who disagreed, and said it should not be done.

Mr. STENNIS. I am afraid the Senator misunderstood me. I stated that many statements have been made in argumentative form to the effect that admitting Alaska would aid us militarily, but has any military man, or anyone in the Senator's acquaintance in a position to know, ever pointed out how it would strengthen us?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Of course, I can answer that question in the negative. I have not been so advised by any competent military authority, or any one who has talked to me about it. I may say to the able Senator from Mississippi that my viewpoint is that if Alaska were capable of bearing the responsibilities of statehood, if Alaska had the economic strength to be self-supporting and self-sustaining, she probably could make some contribution toward our national defense. But certainly she would not make such contribution if she were an economic liability to the United States, so far as sustaining her State government was concerned. Until she can be self-sustaining and provide a reasonably strong State government, I do not see how she can make any contribution whatsoever to our national defense.

Mr. STENNIS. Does not the Senator think that in view of the facts established with reference to her economic condition, and her inability to sustain herself as a State economically, she would tend to be a liability as a State, as contrasted to a territory, militarily speaking, under present conditions?

Mr. McCLELLAN. In answer to the inquiry, let me make a comparison by considering the Federal-aid highway program, merely as an illustration. I am sure other illustrations could be made, but let us take the Federal-aid highway program. In order for Alaska to participate in that program, she would have to match Federal funds, just as other States do. We could not very well grant her special favors as a State, but as a territory we do grant her special favors. The Federal Government is paying for all the construction, or substantially all, so far as I know all the construction, of the highways, and no matching requirements are imposed, while she is a Territory. If she became a State, it would be in poor grace, I think, under some circumstances, for her to come to Congress and continually ask that she be excused from matching and that she continue to be treated as a Territory, as we are treating her now by making appropriations for her specifically for internal improvements, and not requiring her to match, as a State would.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I feel that we are acting too hastily, and going a bit to the extreme, if we undertake to admit Alaska now.

While there are no clear specifications, there are certain general requirements which have been accepted historically with reference to the prerequisites to the admission of a territory as a State. They include, first, the desire to become a State, as expressed by a majority of the electorate. It might be said that requirement has been met, since the people did have a vote in 1946. The most populous areas voted for it, whereas the others opposed it; but it was not an imposing majority which favored statehood, certainly not an overwhelming majority.

The next requirement is that there be sufficient population and resources to bear the costs of statehood. If the population of Alaska were condensed into an area comparable to that of the average State in this Union, and if all the developments of Alaska were condensed into an area comparable to the area of the average State of the Union, then there might be some justification for admission, she might at least approach a meeting of the accepted historical requirement.

As I recall, the population of Alaska today is only 1 person to 10 square miles. I believe I am correct about that, that it is 1 settler to 10 square miles. I can appreciate that a large part of the area of Alaska is not well suited for habitation and for settlement, but still it is an area which is going to be within the State, and certain reservations are made with reference to the Federal Government which will be State responsibility, and State obligation will attach.

(At this point Mr. McCLELLAN yielded to Mr. BYRD who reported a nomination, on which debate ensued, which appears at the conclusion of Mr. McCLELLAN'S address.)

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, the third general qualification to be considered in admitting a State is simply that the people are sympathetic with the American ideals of democracy and a republican form of government. I do not believe anyone would raise a question in that regard about the people of Alaska. I certainly would not. I have no reason to suspect that the Alaskan people are not in sympathy in every respect with our ideals and our system of government. I merely go back to the second condition, namely, that there must be sufficient population and resources to bear the costs of statehood.

I could discuss some other aspects of this subject, but in view of other business which Senators desire to transact, I am going to conclude in a few moments.

I should like to point out, in connection with the question of population, or lack of adequate population in relation to the area that would be incorporated as a new State into the Union, that the area is, I believe, 2.7 times the size of the State of Texas, the largest State in the Union, a State which, when it came into the Union, reserved the right, as I recall, to divide itself into five States if it ever desired to do so.

Mr. President, if Alaska is to be admitted as a State, I have some idea that it might be well to explore the question of admitting only a portion of it as a State, the portion which can be developed and defended and protected, whereas certain areas of it possibly should always remain what they in all probability always will be, timber reserves or great forest or mining potentialities.

In that connection, Mr. President, it may be pointed out as we speak of Alaska's sources of revenue and her productive capacity that about 2,000,000 acres of her land are believed to be suitable for cultivation or might be developed agriculturally. But, as of the present, there has been no marked progress in agricultural pursuits in Alaska. There are only 600 farms in the whole area, and that includes fur farms, whatever they may be. I presume that is where wild animals are raised for their skins. Only 12,000 acres out of the total of 2,000,000 acres that may be suitable for agricultural purposes are now improved.

Mr. President, agriculture may never be a main resource of Alaska. I am not prepared to say whether those 2,000,000 acres, if developed, would add great income from natural sources to the people and to the Territory or to Alaska as a State. But these figures clearly indicate the lack of development in that particular field at least. Much greater development is necessary to sustain it as a State.

The same is true, Mr. President, with respect to all other industries. From figures which have already been cited for the record, I do not believe it can be successfully maintained that such industries as Alaska has, the fishing industry, the mining industry, and the timber industry, have made sufficient progress as of yet or are making progress that is indicative of the fact that she is approaching that developed state in which she would be self-sustaining and could bring about productive capacity in all these fields which would yield sufficient revenues to support a State.

Mr. President, I shall not dwell longer upon the subject. I trust we shall not act hastily. Simply because some political platform has endorsed statehood for Alaska or some other Territory I do not believe we in the Congress who have the responsibility to act, should blindly, hastily, and without judicious consideration, enact a law granting statehood, a law which will make an irrevocable committal which we cannot revise, reform, repudiate, or repeal, if we find we have made a mistake. This matter can wait, Mr. President.

How many thousand American boys are dying in Korea this day I do not know. I do not have the casualty list. It may be only hundreds, but it may be thousands. We have a war on our hands. As I said in the beginning of my remarks, the Congress should be engaging itself at this hour and during this adjourned session, during the remainder of the Eighty-first Congress, in enacting legislation, if we have legislation ready for consideration on the floor of the Senate and on the floor of the House of Representatives, which will make a contribution toward a solution of our war problems, or legislation that will make contribution toward a solution of our fiscal problems, which are difficult in these critical times when we are having to take our Government further and further into debt, when we are having to raise taxes higher and higher, when inflation is a direct threat to the Nation at this hour. There are many problems which ought to be solved. We should no longer waste our time on a measure which can wait 1 year, 2 years, or 5 years. By waiting, no serious harm will be done, even if we take favorable action on the bill then.

Mr. President, the motion should be withdrawn and the Senate should be permitted to proceed with more important matters.

During the delivery of Mr. McCLELLAN'S address,

NOMINATION OF ROBERT A. LOVETT TO BE DEPUTY SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BYRD. I am directed by the Committee on Armed Services to report favorably the nomination of Robert A. Lovett, of New York, to be Deputy Secretary of Defense, and to ask for its immediate consideration, or, if it cannot be considered now, to ask that it lie on the table until there is a quorum call. It is important that the nomination be confirmed by the Senate today. It was unanimously recommended by the Armed Services Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator that this is action for the Senate to take in executive session.

Mr. BYRD. I understand that. I make the request as in executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be received now and held for action when the Senate goes into executive session. If the Senator desires to ask unanimous consent to proceed now, he may do so. That, of course, would necessarily raise the question as to the absence of a quorum, the Chair supposes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, because of the importance of the nomination of Mr. Lovett being confirmed today, and there being no opposition to his appointment, the nomination being unanimously approved by the committee, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate, as in executive session, confirm the appointment of Mr. Lovett to be Deputy Secretary of Defense.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I admire Mr. Lovett a great deal, and, in my opinion, he is going to be a great addition to the administration in Washington in these trying hours; but we have a rule about granting unanimous consents in the absence of a quorum call, which is rather important. There might be another occasion when I would not feel the same way about a nomination presented. Because of this general rule, I am sure the Senator from Virginia would not object to having a quorum call.

Mr. BYRD. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If there is to be a quorum call, if the Senator will wait 5 or 10 minutes, I shall conclude.

Mr. BYRD. Very well.

(Mr. McCLELLAN resumed and concluded his speech, which appears in the appropriate place in the RECORD.)

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Aiken	Frear	McClellan
Anderson	Fulbright	McFarland
Benton	George	McKellar
Brewster	Gillette	McMahon
Bricker	Green	Magnuson
Bridges	Gurney	Malone
Butler	Hayden	Martin
Byrd	Hendrickson	Maybank
Cain	Hill	Millikin
Capehart	Hoey	Morse
Carlson	Holland	Murray
Chapman	Hunt	Myers
Chavez	Ives	Neely
Clements	Johnson, Colo.	O'Conor
Connally	Johnson, Tex.	O'Mahoney
Cordon	Johnston, S. C.	Robertson
Donnell	Kem	Russell
Douglas	Kerr	Saltonstall
Dworshak	Kilgore	Schoeppel
Eastland	Langer	Smith, Maine
Ecton	Leahy	Smith, N. C.

Ferguson	Lucas	Stennis
Flanders	McCarthy	Taft

Taylor	Tobey	Wiley
Thomas, Okla.	Tydings	Williams
Thomas, Utah	Watkins	Young
Thye	Wherry

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, as in executive session, in view of the critical military situation, I ask unanimous consent that the rule requiring nominations to lie over 1 day be suspended, and that the nomination of Robert A. Lovett, of New York to be Deputy Secretary of Defense, which has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Armed Services, be considered immediately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the rule be suspended and that the nomination of Robert A. Lovett, of New York, to be Deputy Secretary of Defense, be immediately considered. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I understand that the request for immediate consideration of the nomination requires that the rule be suspended. May I ask the distinguished Senator from Virginia if the report is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. BYRD. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. May I ask whether there was full attendance at the hearing?

Mr. BYRD. I believe the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] was not present, nor were the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER]. The suggestion to take up Mr. Lovett's nomination in committee came from the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], and the motion to consider the nomination was made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN].

Mr. WHERRY. I do not object to the immediate consideration of the nomination. Although the rules of the Senate require that the nomination lie over 1 day, I believe the present emergency warrants immediate consideration of the nomination. In view of the fact that the nomination is unanimously reported by the committee and no objection was made to it, I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request made by the Senator from Virginia that, as in executive session, the Senate consider the nomination of Robert A. Lovett, of New York, to be Deputy Secretary of Defense?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the nomination.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I rise to express my deep gratification at the nomination of Mr. Lovett to be Deputy Secretary of Defense. I have known Mr. Lovett since he has been in public life. I regretted very much when he felt he had to return to business. Now that he is returning to the service of the Government in the very important office of Deputy Secretary of Defense, I wish to express my hearty approval of Mr. Lovett's nomination. We could not have a stronger or abler man in the position.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I should like to associate myself with the remarks made by the Senator from New Jersey. I knew Mr. Lovett quite well while he was in the Department of State, and I have the very highest regard for him. As it is customary for Senators to express themselves when they disapprove a nomination, I should like to express my wholehearted approval of the appointment of Mr. Lovett.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia has moved that the nomination be confirmed. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Robert A. Lovett to be Deputy Secretary of Defense? [Putting the question.] The nomination is confirmed, and, without objection, the President will be notified.

AID TO YUGOSLAVIA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I recommend that the Congress enact legislation authorizing further United States assistance to meet the emergency created by the food shortage in Yugoslavia.

More than 2 years ago the Government of Yugoslavia broke its association with the Soviet Union and its satellites. This rift resulted primarily from the refusal of the Yugoslavs to agree to the dictation of the Kremlin in the affairs of Yugoslavia. The Yugoslavs are determined to maintain their independence of the Kremlin. They are maintaining the largest fighting force in Europe, outside of the Soviet Union.

The breach between Yugoslavia and the Kremlin and its satellites has steadily widened. The Kremlin is determined to wipe out this one successful example of a former satellite which has freed itself from Soviet control. Directly and through its satellites, the Kremlin is trying to destroy Yugoslav independence. Yugoslavia is being subjected to an economic blockade, to propaganda, subversion, military pressure, and harassing border raids.

Since the break between the Kremlin and Yugoslavia, it has been the policy of this Government to assist Yugoslavia to maintain its independence. The continued independence of Yugoslavia is of great importance to the security of the United States and its partners in the North Atlantic Treaty organization, and to all nations associated with them in their common defense against the threat of Soviet aggression.

This past summer Yugoslavia suffered perhaps the worst drought in its history. There were severe crop failures, and the lack of feed and fodder led to the extensive slaughtering of livestock. As a result, Yugoslavia is threatened with famine this winter. This would provide fertile ground for the subversive activities of the Kremlin and would seriously undermine the capacity of the Yugoslav people to resist Soviet aggression.

On October 20, 1950, the Yugoslav Government formally requested United States assistance in averting the worst effects of the disastrous crop failure. This request came only after the Yugoslav Government had exhausted all means of meeting the situation by its own efforts.

Immediate action was necessary to meet the situation. Shipments had to be arranged at the earliest possible date. Otherwise, it would have been impossible to get food to the more remote areas of Yugoslavia before they were isolated by the heavy winter snows.

Accordingly, this Government has taken action to begin shipments under existing authority and with funds already available. The Economic Cooperation Administration has made arrangements for the shipment of flour from Italy and Germany directly to Yugoslavia. At the same time, with the concurrence of the North Atlantic Treaty countries, Mutual Defense Assistance funds are being made available for procurement of food supplies equivalent to the immediate needs of the Yugoslav armed forces. In addition, the Export-Import Bank is permitting a portion of a previously negotiated Yugoslav loan to be used for the purchase and transport of foodstuffs, partly from American surplus stocks. Under present plans, the cost of this interim aid already underway will amount to about thirty million dollars. This is sufficient only to meet a portion of the total need.

Now that the Congress has reconvened, I believe it appropriate to request a special authorization to meet the balance of the essential food needs of the Yugoslav people until the next harvest. Action should be taken promptly. Shipments of the remaining supplies needed must be started before the end of December, if the bulk of the food is to be available for distribution in the critical winter period. The additional aid needed is estimated at $38,000,000. This amount, plus the amount provided under existing authority, will only be sufficient to bring the Yugoslav diet up to a bare subsistence level.

We have received satisfactory assurances from the Yugoslav Government, first, that all assistance furnished by the United States will be given full and continuous publicity through the press and radio in Yugoslavia; second, that the aid will be distributed equitably and fairly among the Yugoslav people; and third, that this distribution will be under the observation of persons designated by the United States. It is my earnest hope that the Congress will, at this session, provide the $38,000,000 necessary for shipments of food to Yugoslavia. In this way we can help preserve the independence of a nation which is defying the savage threats of the Soviet imperialists, and keeping Soviet power out of one of Europe's most strategic areas. This is clearly in our national interest.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, November 29, 1950.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. ANDERSON obtained the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to present an unusual request as a matter of personal privilege. I do not know how long the Senator from New Mexico contemplates speaking, but I ask that after he has concluded the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at noon.

My reason for the request is that Republican Senators are to attend two functions to honor Republicans elected to the Senate, one at an early hour this evening, at 5 o'clock, and a number of Senators would like to be able to get away so as to keep the engagement if they can, and then attend a dinner tonight. I cannot see why there should be any objection, and if there is no objection, I ask that when the work of the Senate is concluded, which I trust will be as expeditiously as possible, a recess be taken until noon tomorrow.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I have no objection whatever to the granting of the request made by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. I do have an insertion for the RECORD, and will take probably 4 or 5 minutes discussing it, in addition to the time of the actual introduction of the material.

Mr. WHERRY. I will amend the unanimous-consent request so as to include what the Senator from Florida has in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Nebraska giving notice of an intention to make such a request, or is he making it?

Mr. WHERRY. I am making it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the address of the Senator from New Mexico, who has now taken the floor——

Mr. WHERRY. And insertions in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And after routine insertions in the RECORD have been disposed of, that the Senate may then recess until noon tomorrow.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, let me call attention to the fact that the Senator from Florida is not proposing to make a routine insertion in the RECORD. He desires to read something for the body of the RECORD, and to take 4 or 5 minutes on it.

Mr. WHERRY. I so amend the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the present occupant of the chair for putting the request, and also thank the Members of the Senate for their consideration.

STATEHOOD FOR ALASKA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. LUCAS to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 331) to provide for the admission of Alaska into the Union.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I can assure Members of the Senate that they will have no difficulty in meeting the engagements they now have, because I do not intend to take very much time. But it was my privilege to serve as the presiding officer while the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs considered statehood for Alaska, and because of my interest in the hearing I desire to speak this afternoon very briefly, and discuss why I believe the motion to take up this question at this time should prevail.

At the very outset, Mr. President, I desire to incorporate in my remarks an editorial which appeared in the Washington News of November 28. Any number of newspaper editorials, fine editorials in all sorts of newspapers from all over this land, could be introduced at this time, but I desire to offer this one because it is reasonably short, and because it expresses one point which I think is of great importance, namely, that since the outbreak of the Korean War, the position of Alaska and Hawaii on the Pacific frontier has made them more important than ever to the security of the whole Nation.

Says this editorial:

They—

Referring to Alaska and Hawaii—

They are military outposts vital to the defense of the United States.

It is because of that fact that I desire to speak of them here this afternoon.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks the editorial to which I have referred, entitled "Vote Statehood Now," be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VOTE STATEHOOD NOW

The long-deferred statehood bills for Alaska and Hawaii are coming before the Senate as the first order of business in the postelection session of Congress.

It is urgently important that the Senate pass them.

These bills are three-fourths of the way along to enactment. The House passed them by large majorities last March, and the Senate Insular Affairs Committee has approved them. A poll last summer showed a majority of the Senate's Members in favor of both measures. Their prospects are good—if a filibuster can be staved off.

No party issue is involved, since both major platforms promise statehood for the two Territories. The only dangerous opposition is sectional—some southern Democrats fear the Senators from the two new States would provide more votes for civil-rights measures which the southerners oppose.

All the arguments for and against these bills repeatedly have been heard in Congress. On their merits alone there is no need for further long debate.

The people of Alaska and Hawaii are American citizens. They are eager and able to assume the rights and responsibilities of self-government. It is an American tradition to grant statehood to Territories whose populations desire it and who have proved themselves worthy and capable of managing their own affairs.

Alaska and Hawaii need statehood so their people can supervise and have a more direct hand in the development of their own rich resources. As Territories they have had a limited voice in national affairs, and often an inadequate one in convincing Washington of their basic needs.

Since the outbreak of the Korean War, their position on the Pacific frontier has made them more important than ever to the whole Nation's security.

They are military outposts vital to the defense of the United States. As full-fledged States they would be better able to back up our armed forces already stationed in their areas.

Denial of statehood to Alaska and Hawaii, both long under the American flag but each including in its population sizable groups descended from Asiatics, would lend weight to Communist propaganda that we seek to reestablish colonialism in Asia; that we want to keep such people under subjection.

With Red China's delegates in this country to observe and to use the United Nations as a sounding board for such propaganda, now is an opportune and impressive time to show the people of Asia that America really believes in democracy and self-government for those under its flag.

The case for admitting Alaska and Hawaii to full partnership in the Union is overwhelmingly strong. The Senate should demand the right to vote on these bills and to make them law.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, a great many questions arise which quite obviously reveal the fact that it is contended that we should consider these bills but not dispose of them on the basis of their present position on the calendar. For example, the question arose a few minutes ago as to whether or not many Territories had not remained Territories longer than Alaska before coming into the Union as States. In order that we may set the matter at rest, I desire to introduce into the RECORD at this point a study made by the Legislative Reference Service showing the facts as to the admission of States into the Union, with particular reference to the first legislation introduced in the Congress for that purpose.

Mr. President, this table shows that my home State of New Mexico was the longest achieving statehood, the time elapsing being 49 years after the organic act was passed setting up Territorial government.

Next comes Alaska, which has been an incorporated Territory some 38 years. But Alaska became a possession of the United States in 1867, upon its annexation. A regularly organized government was established, by the act of 1884. The statute certainly could be said to be the first organic act. The term "Territory" was used steadily in referring to it. The courts of the country have recognized that the act of 1884 made it a Territory, and while the act using the term "Territory," with a capital "T," actually incorporating Alaska as a Territory, was not passed until 38 years ago, it is true that it has been a Territory longer than any other Territory.

If I may do so at this time, Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a table showing the various terms of years the Territories waited for statehood, showing 49 years in the case of New Mexico. In the case of Alaska, the time interval has been 38 years. That was why earlier this afternoon I rose to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas if he could list the many States which had waited longer than Alaska to become States of the Union.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] 29 States are listed above. The original 13 States have, of course, been omitted. Vermont, Kentucky, Maine, and West Virginia were formed from already existing States. California and Texas were acquired from foreign governments and did not pass through the Territorial stage.

[2] States are listed under the names by which they are now known rather than by the name of the Territory from which they were formed.

[4] This column indicates the earliest date at which a reference was found to a specific bill, under consideration by at least 1 of the 2 Houses of Congress, which provided for admission of a Territory as a new State. Resolutions and petitions addressed to the Congress by Territorial governments or residents have been excluded. Source of data: Annals of Congress, 1789–1824; Register of Debates in Congress, 1824–37; Congressional Globe, 1833–73; CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1873–1912. Since the early indexes were incomplete, it is possible that bills were introduced, but since they were not debated, did not appear in the index.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, the question arises, Why do we tie up the Congress at this time for a discussion of Alaska? Those who are advocates of statehood for Alaska and Hawaii—and I am one of them—do not desire to take up the time of Congress. We would be ready to vote this afternoon, or tomorrow afternoon, or the next afternoon, without discussion of the bills.

Some idea of the confusion which exists may be gained from what happened a while ago, when one of my colleagues rose and asked if there were strong and well-developed county governments in Alaska. I listened carefully to the answer dealing with that subject.

The truth is that there are no county governments in Alaska, and the hope is that there will be none, because the people of Alaska believe that the county government has become in some degree an unnecessary step in the process of handling affairs in our States. All over this land there are places where we have considered city and county governments consolidated. The old county government worked very well a hundred years ago. Now there are many places in the United States where a county government is a liability, and people so regard it, and the people of this country, because they are progressive and forward-looking, have felt that they would like to see if it is not possible to continue State governments without any intervening county governments, but going directly to the cities and municipalities.

I was very greatly interested in the speech made by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] on the pending question. I shall comment on his speech, and I desire to say, as many in the Senate know, that it has been my great profit and privilege to be a personal friend of the senior Senator from Nebraska for more than half my adult life. I admire him, and I admire the very forthright way in which he spoke yesterday upon this matter. But I must comment on some of the things he said.

He spoke of the population of Alaska, and, quoting him, he said it was "somewhere around 100,000. Nearly half are in Alaska only because Federal jobs have taken them there." The preliminary census figures have been available for some time, and the Senator might have used them. The total for Alaska is indicated at 126,661—subject to some modification. The rate of increase since the last census is approximately 74 percent—the greatest increase in any jurisdiction in the Nation. Of course, the great defense program and supporting governmental activities are accountable for a substantial part of the increase, but they are not solely responsible. However, the latest report of the Civil Service Commission indicates that there were 12,064 Government employees in Alaska as of December 1949. If each employee accounts for three persons in the population—which is doubtful, in view of the type of employment involved, shortages of housing, and the resultant tendency to employ both husband and wife where possible—then Government employment does not account for a quarter of the population.

The recent census figures indicate a general population growth in communities with little or no Government employment. Seward, with an increase of approximately 100 percent, enjoyed a rate of growth second only to Anchorage, and has practically no direct Government employment, although it is affected by the increased tonnage of freight induced directly and indirectly by Government construction programs along the Alaska Railroad. In southeastern Alaska, Ketchikan enjoyed a very substantial growth of 10.8, while Juneau, the capital and center of government, had a very slight increase of 1.6 percent. These figures include such diverse types of employment as the personnel of the Government-owned Alaska Railroad, who are directly supported by operating revenues and by the local economy.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I did not get the figure as to the Government employees. Did the Senator say what the number was?

Mr. ANDERSON. The statement was made that half the population was due to Government employment. I am not able to say what the figure is, except to point out that the population was 126,000, and the Government workers numbered 12,064. So it is about one-tenth. Counting three to the family, it would be about 30 percent.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator takes into account in his figures, does he not, what might be called the collateral population? I do not mean the families; I mean the ones who are there working on Government jobs, who are not Government employees. By that I mean contract workers and workers of that type.

Mr. ANDERSON. That includes the wage workers engaged in construction by the Alaska Road Commission and civilian maintenance employees in the military installations, yes, because the workers there are Government employees.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. Can the Senator make an estimate of how many individuals are working for private contractors, who are engaged on Government contracts? Can the Senator shed any light on that point?

Mr. ANDERSON. No, Mr. President, I cannot.

Again, the Senator from Nebraska was somewhat critical of conditions in Alaska, and he read some editorials which were from somewhat partisan, antiadministration newspapers in Alaska. I quote this citation that he gave with reference to the Governor of Alaska. He said:

> Governor Gruening is, of course, immune from expressions of popular approval or disapproval by the people of Alaska, since he holds his position, apparently for life, by appointment from Washington.

Mr. President, we all recall that in the spring of 1949 extensive hearings were held by the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs to determine the record, the abilities, and the character of Gov. Ernest Gruening, who had served two terms as Governor of Alaska and had on both previous occasions been confirmed unanimously by the Senate of the United States. He had been twice appointed by President Roosevelt, and was reappointed in 1948 by President Truman. That reappointment was made during the Eightieth Congress, and, for reasons best known to the senior Senator from Nebraska, Governor Gruening's nomination was not acted upon during that session.

In the Eighty-first Congress, however, Governor Gruening's name was brought forward and his nomination was considered, and hearings were held. At those hearings a great variety of witnesses appeared. One individual, who had some connection certainly with political life in Alaska, brought several witnesses here, and they were given all the time they needed. What was the result? A unanimous vote in favor of confirmation of Governor Gruening by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs consisting of seven Democrats and six Republicans. Not one dissenting vote was recorded and the confirmation by the entire Senate which followed was likewise unanimous. Governor Gruening at that time had served for two full terms of 4 years with the additional year brought about by the failure of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs in the Eightieth Congress to act on his nomination. He had therefore served 9 years. He has been a vigorous governor. Sometimes, perhaps, he acts in such a fashion as to arouse opposition; but there was no evidence whatever produced at the extended hearings which in the slightest degree reflected on Governor Gruening's integrity, ability, devotion, or in any way impugned the conduct of his office.

If we were to make any criticism at all against statehood for Alaska, it seems to me it should be based on the claim that the legislature is controlled by Governor Gruening. Personally I do not think it is. I think the people of Alaska elect their own legislatures freely and without pressure. The fact is that the Governor of Alaska has far less power than the governor of any State, and indeed far less than the Governor of the sister Territory of Hawaii.

The Organic Act of Hawaii permits the Governor to appoint the heads of his various administrative bureaus. The Governor of Hawaii appoints the attorney general, the superintendent of public works, the commissioner of public lands, the treasurer, the auditor, the director of the department of labor, and so on. That is not true in Alaska. In Alaska practically all the important officials are elected. Alaskans elect their own attorney general, their treasurer, their auditor, their highway engineer, their commissioner of labor; none of these is dependent on the Governor. In fact, the Governor has little or no patronage and little or no power.

The senior Senator from Nebraska stated in his speech that the expenditures of the Gruening-controlled legislature far exceeded tax revenues. Of course, the fact is that a comprehensive tax system, which was long overdue, was enacted by a freely elected legislature in 1949. However, this much-needed tax reform was beset by injunctions and court action brought by the absentee interests which are now fighting statehood and which had resisted the payment of taxes for years. It is in large part due to Governor Gruening's leadership that this situation has now been altered. The treasury of Alaska, I think, is in sound condition.

The senior Senator from Nebraska quoted an editorial from a partisan newspaper alleging that the board of administration unfroze funds amounting to some $561,000 in order to permit the construction program of the University of Alaska to proceed. The editorial in question charged that these funds were released for political purposes. I do not think anything could be farther from the truth. In the first place, the board of administration is composed of six officials, of whom the Governor is only one. Four of them, the territorial treasurer, the territorial auditor, the territorial highway engineer, and the attorney general, are elected officials, wholly independent of the Governor, owing their office wholly to the people of Alaska. The fifth official, the commissioner of education, is likewise independent of the Governor. His appointment is by a board of five, appointed for 6-year terms and confirmed by the legislature. To allege, as the senior Senator from Nebraska does, that when the board of administration acts it is the Governor acting, is wholly unrelated to the facts. Governor Gruening has just one vote out of six.

What actually happened in this case is that the board of regents of the University of Alaska called a meeting earlier this fall to discuss the university's program for the coming year, and telegraphed the board of administration, asking for the release of $500,000 of funds so that contracts could be entered into for construction during the coming building season beginning next spring. The board of administration met, and by unanimous vote acceded to this request. Nothing could be more wrong than any allegation that there is anything but a free, thoroughly democratic form of government functioning in Alaska.

One of the main contentions the senior Senator from Nebraska uses in justification of his opposition to the granting of statehood is one which relates to the political situation in Alaska. He asserts that—

> The situation in regard to Alaska and Hawaii is considerably like the situation we find in some of the States of the Union, where the labor group—and it is the most radical labor group—controls the elections. If statehood were granted, the very moment that they wanted to do so, the labor group could send to the Senate two of the most radical type of labor leaders.

However, I am afraid that the Senator's eloquence is not justified, for subsequently in summarizing the results of the present elections in Alaska the Senator from Nebraska later in his speech says:

> The elections recently held in Alaska gives some indication that the people there cannot be controlled so easily. Of the Territorial senate seats to be filled, six were won by Republicans, only two by Democrats. However, there were six hold-over Democrats and only two hold-over Republicans, with the result that, as I stated a while ago, the Territorial senate is still evenly balanced, 8 to 8.

And later he remarks:

> Even more significant, however, was the wholesale defeat of leading Gruening supporters.

Now I read that statement in connection with his previous statement that—

> If statehood were granted, the very moment that they wanted to do so, the labor group would send to the Senate two of the most radical type of labor leaders.

I do not think we need to fear that if granted statehood Alaskans will react politically too differently from the way in which residents of other States of the Nation react. Certainly the political trends in Alaska over the years parallel those of the Nation as a whole, and the recent elections merely reemphasize this fact. In 1946 the Congress was Republican as was the territorial legislature in Alaska; in 1948 the shift went in the other direction and the Democrats regained control. In the elections for Alaskan Legislature this year, as in the National Congress, there was shown a shift which again foreshadowed national patterns as the elections were held a month prior to those in the States.

Some concern has been expressed by those who claim an apparent inability on the part of Alaska to maintain itself as a State. I would be worried, too, if I had not heard the testimony. I suggest that those who make such claim read the hearings, in which they will find that persons from Alaska who knew their own budget well, presented it time after time and justified their belief that Alaska could function properly as a State.

I now desire to turn to the comments made by my very distinguished friend, the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], and I call the Senate's attention to the figures which he used relating to the area. He said:

> Yet it is proposed that those 1,500 square miles in Alaska should be represented by two Members of this great body.

When did the idea start that States should be represented on the basis of acreage? Think of poor little Rhode Island and what would happen to her if representation in this body were based on acreage. I do not believe such a contention can be valid.

Much has been said about the military importance of Alaska. I refer particularly to the statement made in the Senate by the Senator from Mississippi, during his splendid address. It was a good address. I hope my distinguished friend will take my assurance, as I gave a similar assurance in the case of the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska, that what I say is not in any way unkindly said. I realize that the statement of the Senator from Mississippi is based upon such information as he had. Having sat through the hearings, I have different and sometimes conflicting information. The Senator from Mississippi said:

> Except for the general statement by the President of the United States, made to the Congress yesterday, that the granting of statehood to Alaska would greatly increase our military powers, and a general statement made by ex-Secretary of Defense Johnson, when he appeared before the committee, I have not found any military officer or any military person who has made a statement in favor of this proposal.

He then proceeds to quote an obscure rear admiral who was brought in to testify at the hearings. I do not say that the persons I have in mind are military persons, but I give the Senator the name of Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, who in a recent speech made in Denver again referred to the military importance of Alaska. I give the Senator from Mississippi the name of Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who is busy with military matters, who has had the military importance of Alaska on his mind, as it has been on mine. I give him the name of General MacArthur as a thoroughly qualified expert. I give the Senator the name of William Donovan, who has investigated the situation. I give him the name of Gen. Hap Arnold, deceased, who had a good deal to say about Alaska. I give him the name of Robert Patterson, former Secretary of War. I hope the Senate weighs those names against the representatives of absentee owners of industry in Alaska.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a short question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. STENNIS. Does the Senator have at hand what was said by those whose names he has just given? Of course, I know their names carry weight. I should like to know what they said, if the Senator has it available.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not have it immediately available, but I can submit it subsequently. I am not prepared now to present the statements of those individuals.

There are a great many things in the speech of the Senator from Mississippi which I am sure were said with good grace. Here is a statement from the Senator's speech:

> For the first time, the Senate of the United States is face to face with the proposition of taking action on the question of admitting as a State within the United States an area which is geographically unconnected with the mainland.

Mr. President, I am not sure what the geography of Alaska is, but my impression was that Alaska was connected with the mainland. I do not believe that condition has changed a bit since we had our hearings. I think the Senator from Mississippi has been misinformed as to the geographical connection of Alaska with the mainland.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. Does the Senator mean to argue that Alaska is connected with the mainland of the United States of America and that the 500 or 600 miles intervening between the United States and Alaska now constitute a part of Alaska?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; but I think the Senator well understands that the mainland is always recognized as being part of the continent. It is true that the territorial limits of Alaska do not touch the boundaries of the United States. No doubt that is what the Senator meant. Of course, Hawaii is in a different situation in that respect.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. Other than for a play on words, there is no misunderstanding of the meaning of the Senator. He means contiguous territory, does he not?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; and of course there is always the question of the importance of taking in contiguous territory.

Further on in his speech, the Senator from Mississippi referred again to a statement of the Senator from Nebraska when he said that if a vote were to be taken today in Alaska on the question of statehood, it would be approximately evenly divided.

Mr. President, I wish to say that is a matter of opinion; but certainly all the contacts I had with people from Alaska did not persuade me of that.

I desire to refer briefly to the question of the great area of Alaska. There is particular reference to the fact that 20,000,000 of the best acres of forest land are exempted from the operations of the bill. I do not know that they are exempted. They are retained as Government forests, exactly as Government forests have been retained in Montana, California, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Colorado, and New Mexico. I do not believe there was any argument against the admission of those States into the Union on the ground that forests had been retained by the Federal Government.

I now refer to a statement in the speech of the Senator from Mississippi as it appears on page 15933 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for yesterday, November 28. At that point in his speech he said:

> The Government would also withhold 50,000,000 acres of land for gas and oil development. I understand such land to be the best and most valuable in the Territory.

Mr. President, I simply wish to suggest to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi that most of that oil land is in a naval oil reserve which stretches around the Arctic Circle. A great deal of it is covered with ice and snow. Most of it is absolutely unusable for any purpose, and it would not be regarded by me as the best and most valuable land in the Territory. It is useful chiefly for the production of oil.

I recognize that the statement to which the Senator refers comes directly from minority views filed on the bill by the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER]. I think perhaps the difficulty is that the Senator from Nebraska was referring to the forest lands in the Tongass National Forest, not to the 50,000,000 acres of land which would be retained for oil development. We have tried very hard to make sure that there can be development. So I call attention again to this statement as it appears in the speech of the Senator from Mississippi:

> Mr. President, I am not complaining about land being withheld. However, the land so withheld would not be subject to the so-called great development which has been referred to.

I cannot agree with that statement because the land which would be withheld, so far as the forest land is concerned, chiefly is in the Tongass National Forest and some other national forests, and, as many persons know, every effort has been made recently to develop pulpwood in that area. I think the thing which will contribute most to that development would be the granting of statehood to Alaska, and that the thing which would prevent its development would be the failure of Congress at this session to take proper action in respect to granting statehood to Alaska.

Mr. President, let me refer to subsequent statements which appear in the speech made to the Senate yesterday by the Senator from Mississippi. I am trying to refer to as little of the speech as I can, in order to avoid burdening the RECORD. In the Senator's speech reference was made to the decline in the population of Alaska from 1900 to 1930; the Senator said there was a period of 30 years when that decline occurred.

Of course, Mr. President, there was a population decline during that period. In my opinion, it was due to the fact that Alaska was a Territory and had not achieved statehood. If it had achieved statehood, I think there might have been a great growth of population during that period.

A little later in his speech the Senator from Mississippi pointed out that—

> Such a situation is not due to lack of law or the fact that the people in Alaska cannot vote for the President of the United States; neither is it due to the fact that the flag of the United States is not now flying over the country, for it is flying there. It is due to the extreme climate and the hazardous living conditions.

Mr. President, I am not sure that statement is correct, because there are great areas in Alaska where the climate is very similar to that of the North Central States and the Great Plains States. In a report on the Matanuska Valley I saw a statement that its climate is very similar to that of Illinois. My impression is that a great deal of the area could be developed and should be developed. I am interested in trying to say that one reason why I believe that the motion to bring this bill before the Senate should be agreed to is that, if the bill is brought before the Senate, we can then develop the facts with respect to Alaska and the facts with respect to Hawaii; and if we develop the facts, I believe that both these Territories will, as they should, become States. I think it would be wrong for us not to agree to the pending motion and not to bring these bills to the floor of the Senate, because, in my opinion, the very fact of bringing them to the floor would result in a development of the facts which have related to these areas for a long, long time.

It is true that the colonization of the Matanuska Valley has proceeded more slowly than many persons would have desired. Yet I have talked to many farmers who have been very happy with their situation in that valley. We have authorized the Matanuska project, which is in the process of development; and when it is developed it will make possible the electrification of that area and also will provide some surplus water for the valley. When that project is completed it will greatly change conditions there.

Let me refer to another portion of the speech made yesterday by the Senator from Mississippi. I hope I shall not do any violence thereby. Of course, I myself object to having other persons quote isolated sentences out of the context of a speech I have made. If the Senator from Mississippi feels that way about the references I am making to his speech, he has my apology in advance, for I do not mean to proceed in that way.

During his speech the Senator from Mississippi said that he had reason to believe that "gold mining is a rapidly declining industry."

Yes, Mr. President; that is true both in Alaska and in many of the States of the Union. Is there any reason to believe that gold mining would flourish in Alaska when it is declining in California and in Nevada? Is it likely that the very thing which around the world has brought about a decrease in the price of gold has had a different effect in Alaska? After all, Alaska is very much a part of this continent.

Then we find this statement in the speech made yesterday by the Senator from Mississippi:

> I understand that, because of high transportation costs and increased cost of labor, the timber and pulp industry is on the decline.

Mr. President, there never has been a pulp industry in Alaska. Therefore how it could decline I do not know.

However, I may say there is reason to believe that, by conferring statehood upon Alaska a great pulpwood industry will be developed in the Tongass National Forest, and that industry will be of tremendous benefit to the newspaper industry in the United States, which today is not so happy as we would like it to be.

We have passed bills relating to the Tongass National Forest. It is true that actions have been pending to determine who owns the Tongass National Forest and what the Indians will do with their revenues. However, I believe a possibility exists for the development there of one of the finest pulpwood industries anywhere in the world.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point for a brief question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. Will the Senator explain why it is necessary for statehood legislation to be enacted in order to permit Alaska to obtain the benefit of this pulpwood industry? I really do not understand that point.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know, except to say that many Territories which subsequently became States of the United States were held back and retarded for years and years and years, when they were Territories; but with the granting of statehood, suddenly there came a great expansion. I am one of those who look at example after example and believe that what happened in Nebraska, in New Mexico, in Oregon, and in Washington, is likely to happen in Alaska. I believe that when Alaska becomes a State and has two Senators on this floor, fighting for Alaska steadily, and when Hawaii becomes a State and has two Senators on the floor of the Senate, representing it constantly, that will make a great deal of difference for those two areas.

If I had the printed hearings before me, I could give examples bearing on that point. However, let me say that when we had the hearings, it was pointed out that a certain defense project was undertaken in Alaska, and that the proper officials of that Territory came to Washington and pleaded with the military authorities to handle that project in a certain way. They made that plea based upon their long familiarity with the climate of Alaska and with various other conditions there. However, they were not able to prevail. They had not a single vote anywhere in the Government; they had only the right to be heard on the floor of the House of Representatives. They had no chance whatever to cast a vote, and they did not seem to have proper influence in the right spots. But, Mr. President, if statehood were conferred, the two full-fledged Members of the United States Senate and at least one and perhaps two Members of the House who would come from Hawaii, and the two Senators and one Representative who would come from Alaska, would have an opportunity to go to the National Defense Department and thus probably prevent a project being handled in an unwise manner.

I wanted to tie in what I had said before with the statement of the Senator from Mississippi, that—

> I do not believe anyone has much to look forward to insofar as the pulpwood industry in Alaska is concerned.

Let me say that, as Secretary of Agriculture, I dealt with people in the United States who not only wanted then, but who want now, to develop the pulpwood industry in Alaska. They are ready to spend millions of dollars of private enterprise venture capital in the development of the pulpwood industry there, and yet that great resource is locked up tight and cannot be freed. Those who have flown over the forests of this country—and it has been my privilege to fly over a great many of them on inspection tours, including nearly all of them in the western section of the United States, in part at least—recognize that when timber becomes ripe it no longer grows; it begins to decay. There are many examples of that in this particular area in Alaska, where development is long overdue. The country needs this resource now, and needs it badly. I say that we ought to have it developed at the earliest possible date.

Mr. President, with one final statement, I shall conclude. Says the Senator from Mississippi:

> The immediate question is, Are we going to admit Alaska and Hawaii as States; and then, if we do, what is the reasoning whereby we can chop the process off and stop as to the others?

In other words, he fears that Puerto Rico, Guam, and a great many other areas may want to come into the Union at once as States because of the precedent of Alaska. It seems to me the Senator overlooks the fact that there is a difference in that the other areas lack incorporation as Territories. The first step has not been taken. They are not incorporated as Territories. Only Alaska and Hawaii remain in that category. Therefore, I see no great danger that anything which is adverse to the interests of this country can result from the passage of these bills.

But, more important, I see every reason in the world to agree to the pending motion and consider both the Alaska and the Hawaii statehood bills. We are trying to say to the world that we believe in the democratic process, that we believe in giving the people of Alaska and of Hawaii a chance to present their case on this floor, as they have done it successfully in the House of Representatives. We believe they should have an opportunity to vote, and yet we cannot agree to a motion to consider the bills and thereby have a vote on the question whether Alaska and Hawaii should come into the Union. Mr. President, how, then, can we consistently tell the people in other parts of the world, particularly in those places where we now are having trouble, that we believe fully in the whole democratic process, if we will not allow the advocates of statehood for Hawaii and Alaska to obtain a vote upon this floor?

I hope that we may quickly agree to the motion. I hope that we may then have a thorough discussion. If there are points in the bill which still should be improved, those of us who worked on it long and earnestly would welcome constructive suggestions for its improvement; but in the meantime I believe we owe it to ourselves to vote on the motion, either to vote it up or down, and to determine whether we shall or shall not consider the statehood bills.

I hope that our decision will be that to proceed to vote on the bill granting statehood to Alaska, and then, having passed that bill, proceed to vote on statehood for Hawaii, and add two new stars to our flag. But regardless of the final outcome, I think that in this hour, when democracy surely is on trial, we owe it to ourselves to see that the motion to consider this bill comes immediately before the Senate and is agreed to.

THE STATE OF THE UNION—RESULTS OF THE RECENT ELECTION—ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES A. FARLEY AT THIRTY-FOURTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FLORIDA STATE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I rise to make brief remarks concerning another subject, but before addressing myself to it, I may say that I fully approve of the position taken by the distinguished Senator from New Mexico relative to the motion to bring up the Alaska statehood bill, and I should like to associate myself with him in his remarks on that subject.

Mr. President, on Tuesday, November 21, at the annual banquet of the Florida State Chamber of Commerce, at Tampa, we were distinctly honored to have present as our honor guest on that occasion and as our principal speaker a truly great American from the State of New York, the Honorable James A. Farley.

So pithy was his speech and so full of common-sense remarks with reference to the state of our Nation and the problems with which our Nation is confronted both on the domestic front and in foreign fields that I wish at this time, by unanimous consent, to incorporate as a part of my remarks the full address as made to us by that distinguished American on that occasion.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Once more we have held an election in wartime. To do that is an achievement in any country at any time. Even in England, which is well based on principles of freedom, they avoid elections in times of crisis. But here in America we have never failed in our democratic process. We debated the issues, foreign and domestic, we freely criticized our Government and we turned out in some States in numbers never before experienced in a mid-term election.

As long as that can happen our free institutions are safe.

Somehow I feel, as a Democrat, that the results generally, while they indicated a Republican trend, were good for the Democratic Party. Hhat party still holds the presidency and it still holds both Houses of Congress. There are some Democrats who were disappointed. And there were some who were never real Democrats who were deeply disappointed. But out of the lessons of this election we can draw some wisdom that may make for a better and more unified Democratic Party and a better two-party system for the Nation as a whole. I shall mention a few of these lessons.

First, it showed in Ohio and in several other places that neither the Republican nor the Democratic Parties, nor the working man himself, nor the voters generally want an independent labor party. I have many times made myself clear on this subject.

Since labor unions became an effective force in our economy it has been suggested by some that labor might conceivably form a political party of its own, with the avowed objective of presenting its aims through the medium of a platform sponsored by an independent labor party.

I want to say at the very outset that I am definitely opposed to such an idea because I am a firm believer in the two-party system.

Labor has sufficient leeway, within the scope of this system, to protect and further its interests. There would always be the temptation to hew too closely to the labor line. A political party loses its effectiveness when it lacks a universal viewpoint. Whether it be the Democratic Party or the Republican Party, the interests of all the people must be considered in framing a philosophy or platform when an appeal is made to the voters.

Let there be no misunderstanding of my attitude toward labor. I believe that in the rapid and evolutionary changes in our country labor has borne its share of the burden and has demonstrated its usefulness in our economic life.

The great danger since the two big labor federations have set up their own political organizations is that in many districts and in some States these organizations might well supplant one or both of the regular parties. The result of this would be the elimination of policies by one issue and by one group in the community. That is quite contrary to the whole theory of government in this Republic under the two-party system. The fear of that in Ohio, I know in this year's election drove many Democrats to vote for TAFT. And it is also clear that thousands of union members refused to be told how to vote by the political arms of the unions and voted for TAFT in protest.

The principle upon which this Nation rests is that individuals vote as individuals, not as members of blocs. They vote their convictions through the party of their choice. And that party represents all interests, business, agriculture, labor, and capital.

The election in New York also proved that the voters do not prefer to support third splinter parties. We have had two of that type in the Empire State, the American Labor Party and the Liberal Party.

The American Labor Party came to be heavily influenced by Communists. It ran a ticket this year which was thoroughly buried by the regular party vote. Congressman MARCANTONIO, the leader of the party, was trounced by a candidate approved by both of the major parties. I hope that is the last we shall hear of MARCANTONIO, his Communist supporters, and his splinter nuisance party.

The Liberal Party in New York represented a somewhat less radical point of view than MARCANTONIO. This year the Democratic Party, I think most unwisely, permitted the Liberals to move in. They even submitted to dictation in choosing candidates by the Liberal Party. In the final show-down the alliance was very unhappy. The Liberal vote fell below its previous record. I hope that the leaders of the Liberal Party, many of whom are fine, sincere people, will see the folly of splitting the electorate into many rather than two parties. France and other countries have suffered the tortures of too many parties for many years.

And so I am happy to note that the outlook is very dark for third or fourth parties in this country.

As we turn from parties to issues there is another real lesson in this election. Confronted as we are with a great peril in our foreign relations, with immense deficits and heavy taxation the voters have made it clear that they want the Government to go slow with further experiments in domestic affairs for at least the duration. The Brannan plan, socialized medicine, and other unsubstantial experiments won no honors in this election. We want to be a humane, progressive Nation, but we cannot be bighearted with money we have not got.

The Brannan plan in fact never had the support of the two big farm organizations. They quite properly regarded it as a two-pronged threat to the farmer and to the taxpayer. On the one hand it provided for a drastic regimentation of the producers of nonperishable crops like cotton, corn, and wheat. The southern cotton producers learned during the past year what crop restrictions meant. They want no more of that. On the other hand the Brannan plan provided for selling perishable crops for less than cost with the taxpayer making up the difference. This was a subsidy for producers and for consumers alike. And I believe sincerely that the American people do not want to become permanently subsidized citizens. Part of the people cannot long live off of another part of the people in any free country.

I believe, however, that the Government can do a great deal for agriculture without taking away anyone's liberty. The best way to help the farmer is to help him find the way to the market at less cost and with more efficiency. Government aid in marketing, in lowering the cost of transportation, and in finding new uses for farm products, is the way to prosperity with freedom.

A vast outlet for surplus farm products can and will be found in industrial uses, particularly in the production of commercial alcohol.

In this election and in the primaries in the South that preceded showed further that this country has no desire to follow Socialist Britain in adopting socialized medicine. Certainly that was decided in the primary here in Florida.

This country has led the world in the advancement of medical science, in public health, and in cooperative medical practice. For that American doctors deserve great credit. There are no more devoted, hard-working, and public-spirited citizens in this Nation than the members of the medical profession. Instead of an attempt to make them subject to a Federal bureaucracy and to surrender their freedom to the Government we should encourage them to cooperate in new endeavors to work out themselves means of serving more people with less cost. That is the American way. It is our way.

And while I am speaking of cooperative ways of solving problems without the use of the heavy hand of law I want to add something about civil rights. When we review the history of past years we see clearly that most of the problems raised by the so-called civil rights program are gradually and peacefully being solved right here in the South. The gates of economic opportunity for all races are opening wider and wider, the right to vote is spreading to all and disorders that once resulted in lynchings have been brought under control by the States and communities. To threaten the South with drastic Federal legislation is the last way to approach these problems. And we are a long way now from that last way.

The President might well in the interest of national as well as party unity summon the leaders of the South to solve these problems on a regional and a State basis. To pass a law, especially a Federal law, is never the best way to correct an injustice. Free men in whose hearts there lives a sense of justice and common sense can generally be trusted to do what is right. I say to those anxious people who are too ready to lift the threat of authority to leave recovery to the spirit of liberty.

Now that the election is over let us all lay aside personal and party selfishness and get on with our task. For no greater task ever faced us before. The Soviet Government seeking to bleed us white while awaiting the time to strike turned loose a 5 percent war in June. Then before we had completed that one the Soviet turned loose a 10 percent war with the Chinese Communists. Presumably we are going to get our aggression in installments.

But even this war is loading an immense burden on our economy. We don't know all the figures yet because that news will come on the installment plan. But we must be prepared for something like forty to fifty-five billion dollars during the next 12 months in demands for war and preparation for war.

This demand coupled with the needs for the civil establishment comes on top of an already heavy burden of national debt. And it comes at a moment when nobody knows what the dollar will be worth in the inevitable inflation that threatens us. The problem of raising this money while we at the same time do what we can to check world inflation is much more serious than it was in the late world war. If we are to solve it we must induce the people to lend more and more to Government. For the more the public lends the less there will be to spend and hence less bidding up of prices. It would no doubt be inadvisable as well as unfair to compel workers to buy bonds through what is called compulsory savings. But every effort should be made by cooperative methods to assure such savings perhaps by payroll deductions agreed upon by both workers and employers. Systematic and general savings can accomplish the task and I feel confident that all Americans will respond to a sound and intelligent appeal.

Meanwhile it becomes more and more evident that the Marshall plan will in some form be under consideration for continuation beyond 1952. This with the burden of arming Europe is a very serious prospect. To do so we shall have to cut our expenditures for nonmilitary purposes to the very bone. And since we must forego some of the things that we want we can expect our friends in Europe to do likewise. The nations of Europe must meet every dollar with a real will to help themselves. The building of an army to protect western Europe is a tremendous task. It cannot be done by remote control. It cannot be done by dollars alone. For a well-equipped soldier with no will to fight is not only a liability, he is a threat.

I was very happy a few days ago to read of the action taken by the United Nations organization making possible the resumption of diplomatic relations with Spain which, in my judgment, was too long delayed. I was also pleased to note that action is being taken by the Export Bank in connection with the loan approved by Congress before it recessed. This was all pleasing to me personally because I have been advocating such a course for over 2 years.

I sincerely hope and trust that aid will soon be given for worth-while projects for the rehabilitation of Spain's mining, industry, transportation, and agriculture.

May I also express the hope that President Truman will not too long delay in the appointment of an Ambassador to Spain, which step has already been taken by several European countries.

In my opinion, Spain can be depended upon at all times to fight Communist inroads in Europe and every effort should be made to see to it that she becomes a partner in the Atlantic Pact and of all the organizations in which we are working for the defense of not only western Europe but civilization itself.

There is no doubt in my mind that this course is anticipated by the Spanish people generally, and I am of the opinion that the vast majority of the American people are in the same frame of mind.

I cannot believe that if we approach the task before us with courage and intelligent planning we can fail to meet any emergency. And if we are ready the emergency may not come. For the Soviet expects to win this war without fighting. It expects that our economy will crack and crumble under the strain

If by repressing inflation, by raising production, by maintaining high employment we can show the Communists that ours is the greatest economic system ever known, they may, and I believe, will not precipitate a war. Our safety is in that hope.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I hope that every Senator upon both sides of the aisle will take the time to read in full the speech of Mr. Farley. I think it is so wise and so full of sound, level-headed Americanism as to commend itself to the good judgment of all Americans, whether they be Republicans or Democrats, and regardless of what may be their background.

Mr. President, I shall not attempt to discuss in great detail the remarks made by Mr. Farley, because I much prefer to have his speech stand for itself. I shall not attempt to paint the lily, as would be the case if I attempted to expand at length upon his remarks. But I do think that for the RECORD it might be well to quote some of his succinct remarks which, stated together, give, as I believe, an epitome of the address by Mr. Farley. The first that I quote is this:

Out of the lessons of this election we can draw some wisdom that may make for a better and more unified Democratic Party and a better two-party system for the Nation as a whole.

If there is an expert in matters political in the Nation who would be justified in drawing lessons from the recent election, I think all Americans would agree that expert is Mr. Farley.

My second quotation:

First, it showed in Ohio and in several other places that neither the Republican nor the Democratic Parties, nor the workingman himself, nor the voters generally want an independent labor party.

Third, I quote.

The election in New York also proved that the voters do not prefer to support third splinter parties.

Again quoting on the same point:

I am happy to note that the outlook is very dark for third or fourth parties in this country.

The next point:

Confronted as we are with a great peril in our foreign relations, with immense deficits and heavy taxation, the voters have made it clear that they want government to go slow with further experiments in domestic affairs for at least the duration. The Brannan plan, socialized medicine, and other unsubstantial experiments won no honors in this election.

The next quotation:

I believe sincerely that the American people do not want to become permanently subsidized citizens. Part of the people cannot long live off of another part of the people in any free country.

Another:

This election * * * showed further that this country has no desire to follow Socialist Britain in adopting socialized medicine.

The next point, which I shall mention in more detail in a moment, had to do with the so-called civil rights program, to which I shall return. His conclusion in the discussion of the domestic aspects of this election, and the conclusions which he drew therefrom, are in these words:

Now that the election is over let us all lay aside personal and party selfishness and get on with our task. For no greater task ever faced us before.

From that point he proceeded to discuss with equal terseness and with a splendid grasp the international situation which confronts our Nation throughout the earth. I return, however, Mr. President, to quote at length, without added comment of my own, the text of Mr. Farley's address, or that portion thereof which dealt with the so-called civil-rights question, because it seemed to me to be so fully in accord with the soundly patriotic point of view and with the common sense aspects of the problem, at least as I view it. I quote from Mr. Farley:

And while I am speaking of cooperative ways of solving problems without the use of the heavy hand of law I want to add something about civil rights. When we review the history of past years we see clearly that most of the problems raised by the so-called civil-rights program are gradually and peacefully being solved right here in the South. The gates of economic opportunity for all races are opening wider and wider, the right to vote is spreading to all and disorders that once resulted in lynchings have been brought under control by the States and communities. To threaten the South with drastic Federal legislation is the last way to approach these problems. And we are a long way now from that last way.

The President might well in the interest of national as well as party unity summon the leaders of the South to solve these problems on a regional and a State basis. To pass a law, especially a Federal law, is never the best way to correct an injustice. Freemen in whose hearts there lives a sense of justice and common sense can generally be trusted to do what is right. I say to those anxious people who are too ready to lift the threat of authority to leave recovery to the spirit of liberty.

I close the quotation from Mr. Farley for which every true southerner will be deeply grateful.

Mr. President, without commenting upon Mr. Farley's masterly statement on that great group of problems which is generally referred to as the so-called civil-rights program, I express only—and modestly—the fervent hope that the President may give serious consideration to the suggestions made by this distinguished American, this distinguished son of the great State of New York who, looking from a point of vantage some distance removed from the South, has yet found it in his heart and conscience, at this time of great crisis in our Nation and in the world, to utter these simple and sensible words of advice and counsel. I think he gives good counsel, and I hope his counsel may be followed, not only to the advantage of the political party of which I happen to be a life long member, but also to the great advantage of our Nation as a whole and the strengthening of the cause of unity in our Nation at a time when, above all times in our Nation's history, national unity is a complete necessity.

CONFIRMATION

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Robert A. Lovett, of New York, to be Deputy Secretary of Defense.

SENATE

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1950

(Legislative day of Monday, November 27, 1950)

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, turning aside for this hallowed moment from the violence and turbulence of these embittered days, we would hush the words of the wise and the prattle of the foolish. Let not the state of the world, plunged now into such tragedy and confusion, dim our faith in the ultimate decencies.

May the costly testings of these days be to us but as the refiner's fire, consuming the dross, bringing out the pure gold of our democracy. Teach us Thy lessons, show us Thy way, convict us of our follies, sober us by Thy chastisements, and make us the instruments of a durable peace, just to all nations and hopeful for all men. In this hour of crisis and tension, we lift our living Nation a single sword to Thee. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. O'MAHONEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, November 29, 1950, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

Mr. LUCAS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] be excused from attending the sessions of the Senate, beginning tomorrow, for an indefinite period, inasmuch as these Senators have been appointed by the Vice President to attend the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association meeting in Australia, as delegates from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUCAS. I hope both Senators will arrive safely in Australia, after passing through those troubled waters.

Mr. TAFT. And we also hope that they will return safely.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; we also hope that they will return safely.

NOMINATIONS OF ANNA M. ROSENBERG AND JOHN D. SMALL

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If there are no additional routine matters to be taken up, I shall suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BYRD. As in executive session, from the Committee on Armed Services, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably the nomination of Anna M. Rosenberg, of New York, to be Assistant Secretary of Defense, the position to which she was appointed during the last recess of the Senate; also the nomination of John D. Small, to be chairman of the Munitions Board, a position to which he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate. Action on these nominations was unanimous by the Committee on Armed Services. I ask that the nominations be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar.

INVESTIGATION OF INTERNAL SECURITY OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I withhold it.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], and the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], I ask unanimous consent to submit for appropriate reference a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 366) was received and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Whereas the Congress from time to time has enacted laws designed to protect the internal security of the United States from acts of espionage and sabotage and from infiltration by persons who seek to overthrow the Government of the United States by force and violence; and

Whereas those who seek to evade such laws or to violate them with impunity constantly seek to devise and do devise clever and evasive means and tactics for such purposes; and

Whereas agents and dupes of the world Communist conspiracy have been and are engaged in activities (including the origination and dissemination of propaganda) designed and intended to bring such protective laws into disrepute or disfavor and to hamper or prevent effective administration and enforcement thereof; and

Whereas it is vital to the internal security of the United States that the Congress maintain a continuous surveillance over the problems presented by such activity and threatened activity and over the administration and enforcement of such laws: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a complete and continuing study and investigation of (1) the administration, operation, and enforcement of the Internal Security Act of 1950; (2) the administration, operation, and enforcement of other laws relating to espionage, sabotage and the protection of the internal security of the United States; and (3) the extent, nature, and effects of subversive activities in the United States, its Territories and possessions, including but not limited to espionage, sabotage, and infiltration by persons who are or may be under the domination of the foreign government or organization controlling the world Communist movement or any other movement seeking to overthrow the Government of the United States by force and violence.

SEC. 2. The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate, to hold such hearings, to require by subpenas or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and, within the amount appropriated therefor, to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report hearings of the committee or subcommittee shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. Subpenas shall be issued by the chairman of the committee or the subcommittee, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman.

A majority of the members of the committee, or duly authorized subcommittee thereof, shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, except that a lesser number, to be fixed by the committee, or by such subcommittee, shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of administering oaths and taking sworn testimony.

SEC. 3. The committee, or duly authorized subcommittee, shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties, and is authorized to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the various departments and agencies of the Government to the extent that such services, information, facilities, and personnel, in the opinion of the heads of such departments and agencies, can be furnished without undue interference with the performance of the work and duties of such departments and agencies.

SEC. 4. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $100,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

SEC. 5. The committee shall from time to time report to the Senate the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable respecting necessary legislation. All authority conferred by this resolution shall terminate on March 1, 1952.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to make a brief statement in conjunction with the resolution I have just submitted.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, is there any objection to having a quorum call so that all Senators may hear what the Senator from Mississippi has to say?

Mr. EASTLAND. No; I have no objection to a quorum call.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to have a quorum call.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, when a request for a quorum call is made all business must be laid aside for that purpose.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska withhold his suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. WHERRY. I feel that if business is to be transacted we should first have a quorum call. However, if the Senator insists that I withhold my request I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. MAYBANK. No; I withdraw my request of the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I had suggested the absence of a quorum, but later withheld it because I understood some Senators wished to present routine matters. It is a different matter if speeches are to be made. We have unfinished business before the Senate, and I do not wish to have the unfinished business interrupted by speeches or discussion of irrelevant matters which have nothing to do with the business before the Senate. It seems to me that if we yield to one Senator we shall have to yield to other Senators as well. Therefore, I ask the Senator from Mississippi how long he expects to speak on the resolution.

Mr. EASTLAND. I desire to make a statement on the resolution which I have offered. The statement I desire to make covers a page and three-quarters. I also wish to read into the RECORD a statement on behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] which is approximately one page long. I should judge my reading of the statements would take approximately 2 minutes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I should like to make a statement of approximately 3 minutes on the same resolution.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Are there any other similar requests?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am trying to find out what the situation is, if the Senator from Nebraska will bear with me for a moment. Are there any other Senators who desire to defer the calling of a quorum in order to insert routine matters into the RECORD? I may say to the Senator from Nebraska that if it will take only 3 or 4 minutes to present the statements I would have no objection to withholding my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not object because of the nature of the material to be discussed. However, I believe such statements should be heard by all Members of the Senate, and therefore I requested that a quorum call be had. It is immaterial to me whether we proceed without a quorum call. If the Senator from Mississippi wishes to make his statement without first having a quorum call, it is agreeable to me. I felt it would put all Senators on notice if we first had a quorum call. Furthermore, I think it is a good procedure to follow. However, I am perfectly willing to withhold my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska can make his request. It is utterly immaterial to me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Mississippi so that he may proceed with his statement.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, the resolution which I have just sent to the desk was prepared after consultation with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and other members of the committee whose names appear as sponsors. We have joined in sponsoring this resolution because we feel that the Committee on the Judiciary, which has handled much of the legislation of the Senate dealing with the problems of communism, owes a duty to the Senate and to the people which cannot be fully discharged unless the committee conducts a continuous study and investigation of the operation of our laws relating to espionage, sabotage, and the protection of the internal security of the United States, and the ever-recurring problems of the Communist menace in the United States.

Under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, each committee of the Congress is empowered to make investigations into any matter within its jurisdiction, and accordingly the Committee on the Judiciary is already vested with power, within the confines of its jurisdiction, to make certain investigations relating to our internal security. The purpose of the resolution is therefore to implement the power of the committee under the Legislative Reorganization Act and to provide funds with which to equip the committee in the discharge of its duty.

As one who has served on the subcommittees of the Committee on the Judiciary which have been working on legislation dealing with espionage, sabotage, and Communist infiltration, I am convinced that we are confronted by a task which must be the subject of continuous effort. If, Mr. President, it is sound for the Congress to set up watchdog committees to maintain a surveillance over the operation of our programs of expenditures at home and abroad, it is equally sound to equip the Committee on the Judiciary to maintain a watchful eye over our program to protect the internal security of this country.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to read a statement on the resolution prepared by the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], who is absent from the city of Washington at this time. This is his statement:

> Over the course of many years there have been accumulated by various committees of the Congress substantial quantities of information respecting the scope and nature of the Communist fifth column in the United States, and the Congress has, from time to time, enacted laws which were designed to meet this threat.
> The purpose of the Senate resolution is not to again marshal the factual material which has already been assembled and which demonstrates conclusively the deadly menace of the Communist fifth column, nor is it the purpose of the resolution to vindicate the judgment of the Congress in enacting the laws which it has enacted to cope with the many facets of the problem.
> One of the elementary truths respecting communism in the United States is that it is a dynamic movement which, with devilish cunning, constantly seeks new avenues of expression and escape from detection. One might wish that it were possible for the Congress of the United States to build a legislative Maginot line to protect us from Communist activity, but experience teaches us that we must be constantly alert to the new tactics which are being devised to evade our best legislative efforts. It is for this reason principally that the instant resolution has been presented to the Senate, so that the Congress and the people may constantly be informed of our progress in this fight.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, speaking as one of the cosponsors of the resolution now being presented, I wish to make a few remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield for that purpose?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, just at this hour of terrible crisis, when the military might of communism has been thrown at the military forces of the United States and the free world, there is being published in American newspapers documentary evidence of the Communist conspiracy for espionage and sabotage.

The combination of those circumstances underlines the imperative need for the resolution which has been submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] for himself and other Senators, including myself.

Short of invasion, this Nation has only one way of combating communism and its tactics internally. That is, moral force, backed by law. We have enacted a law, the Internal Security Act of 1950, carefully designed to protect the Nation against the Communist conspiracy. It is the proper and indispensable function of Congress at this moment to see that that act is vigorously and fairly enforced. It is, moreover, the proper and indispensable function of Congress at this moment to determine what further measures may be necessary to protect the Nation's securities and liberties against the ravages of the Communist conspiracy.

Both functions come within the province of the Senate Judiciary Committtee. To serve those ends a thorough and continuing investigation of the Communist conspiracy, and the effectiveness of our efforts to combat it, is necessary. That is the purpose of this resolution. Need for its immediate adoption is clear and compelling.

This Nation and the free world are suffering at this moment from indecision in our external relations with communism. At this same moment we cannot sit idly by and permit indecision here at home to engulf us.

Mr. President, I hope immediate action will be taken on the resolution, and that it will be favorable.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A resolution adopted by the thirty-sixth annual conference of the International City Managers' Association, at Houston, Tex., relating to the establishment of a complete Federal civil defense program; to the Committee on Armed Services.

A resolution adopted by the Council of Men's Work, Church of the Brethren, Middle District of Iowa, Minburn, Iowa, favoring the establishment of peace through the United Nations rather than by force; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A resolution adopted by the Michigan Milk Producers' Association, of Detroit, Mich., protesting against the enactment of legislation providing compulsory health insurance; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

A resolution adopted by the Propeller Club of the United States, Port of San Juan, Puerto Rico, relating to the recent attempted assassination of the President; ordered to lie on the table.

INCREASE OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE—RESOLUTION OF AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a resolution adopted by the American Institute of Accountants, at its annual meeting on October 3, 1950, at Boston, Mass., relating to an increase of appropriations for national defense purposes.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the necessity for increased expenditures by the Federal Government for purposes of national defense makes even more desirable than formerly the greatest possible economy in administration of all departments of the Federal Government; and

Whereas only a part of the recommendations of the bipartisan Hoover Commission directed to the elimination of overlapping, duplications, and waste in the operations of the Federal Government have been adopted by the Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Institute of Accountants at its annual meeting at Boston, Mass., October 3, 1950, urges the Congress to enact legislation at the earliest possible time to give effect to the remaining recommendations of the Hoover Commission which have not yet become effective.

RESOLUTIONS OF WISCONSIN COUNCIL OF AGRICULTURE COOPERATIVE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have in my hand a series of resolutions forwarded to me by Peter E. May, assistant executive secretary of the Wisconsin Council of Agriculture Cooperative.

This distinguished organization is headquartered in 814 Tenney Building, Madison, Wis.

Several of the resolutions adopted at the twenty-second annual farmers' get-together conference of the Wisconsin council at the Hotel Loraine in Madison on October 25 relate to State dairy problems, but I have assembled those resolutions affecting the Congress and national topics. I should like to invite the attention of my colleagues to this series of stimulating resolutions, and so I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION 1. THE THREAT OF AGGRESSION

Our country faces a grave emergency, caused by aggressive forces which threaten to overthrow all self-governing free peoples. The Wisconsin Council of Agriculture Cooperative commends our Government in its efforts to unite with other nations to restore peace in the world. The council pledges its support of the rearmament program to the end that we in this country may continue to enjoy those freedoms for which the founding fathers fought and perpetuated in the Constitution of these United States: freedom to participate in government through our elected representatives; freedom of open assembly and discussion; freedom to worship according to one's own conscience; and freedom of opportunity to develop our lives and work after our own pattern. These we cherish. For these agriculture is willing to make sacrifices.

RESOLUTION 2. INFLATION

Wars and defense preparations are inflationary forces. They create demands for goods and services at a rate faster than it is possible to produce goods and services for meeting these demands. As prices go up the dollar buys less and less. It now takes $1 to purchase the same amount of goods and services that could be bought for 60 cents in 1939.

The Wisconsin Council of Agriculture Cooperative, urgently recommends that steps be taken to the end that government spending not connected with the defense program, and civilian spending be curtailed to the extent necessary in order that the demand for goods and services be kept within the limits of the country's ability to supply those goods and services.

The council further recommends that the defense program be financed in the largest feasible measure on a pay-as-we-go basis.

RESOLUTION 4. SELECTIVE SERVICE

We recognize the necessity for all groups in America contributing their fair share of the manpower needed for national defense in this emergency. For this reason agriculture is not asking for preferential treatment.

We urge that the policies of the various county selective service boards be interpreted and applied more uniformly. We ask that full consideration be given to each individual case based on the history of farm experience and any critical family situation that may be involved.

We recommend that consideration be given to the application of less rigid physical requirements as may still be consistent with public manpower utilization for military requirements.

RESOLUTION 9. REA

The rural-electrification program sponsored by the Federal Government through the Rural Electrification Administration has achieved notable success in speedily bringing to American farms the benefits of electric service. When REA was established in 1935, only 1 out of 10 United States farms had central station electric service; as of June 30, 1950, 86.3 percent of America's farms were electrified.

We commend the Rural Electrification Administration on this achievement. We support the continued effort of the REA to expand its services to rural areas.

RESOLUTION 11. LABOR

There are many common needs, interests, and problems existing between farmers and laborers.

To appreciate the singular relationship between farmers and labor, it must be borne in mind that in their business structure farmers are the owners of capital. Farmers are the employers of labor and are the consumers of goods and services produced at the hands of labor. Labor people are likewise important consumers of agricultural products.

We believe that conferences between labor representatives and the Wisconsin Council of Agriculture Cooperative are desirable and will result in better understanding of the problems that are common to labor and farmer cooperatives.

We heartily endorse and will help to foster conferences between agriculture and organized labor.

We believe that each economic group can and should promote the welfare of its own people. We agree that labor has a right to organize in promoting the welfare of workers.

By the same reasoning we believe that agricultural welfare can best be served by organizations and cooperative associations owned and controlled by farmers.

We believe the past and continuing efforts of organized labor to organize farmers have not been in the best interests of agriculture, and we will oppose the efforts of any nonfarmer group to organize farmers.

RESOLUTION 12. AMERICAN DAIRY ASSOCIATION

We recognize the American Dairy Association as being an efficient means for the advertising, promotion, and sale of dairy products and that it has done very effective work, heretofore.

We of the council support the program now being planned by the directors of the Wisconsin and National American Dairy Associations.

RESOLUTION 15. BUTTER TO ARMED FORCES

It is our understanding that the Armed Forces of United States are being supplied with considerable amounts of butter substitutes and that the Commodity Credit Corporation has millions of pounds of surplus butter on hand. We, therefore, recommend that our Armed Forces be supplied with butter until such time as Government holdings of surplus butter are depleted.

RESOLUTION 16. CORPORATION FARMING

In recent years more vegetable processors have increased the size of their own farming operations. The council of agriculture believes—

(1) That this action reduces the farmer's bargaining power in obtaining fair prices and terms of sale for the vegetables he grows.

(2) A disproportionately larger share of the tax burden is assumed by the farmers in such communities,

(3) The fertility of the soil is exploited at a more rapid rate.

(4) Large numbers of out-of-State labor are brought into such communities, which creates uneasy social problems.

(5) The best long-time interests of agriculture can be served by family-type farming.

The council of agriculture, therefore, feels that this trend of corporation farming by canners is neither in the long-term interests of the public nor of agriculture.

RESOLUTION 18. MILK AND FOOD PRODUCTS AS A PUBLIC UTILITY

We are unalterably opposed to any movement on the part of any municipality or any other governmental agency to take over fluid-milk processing and distribution or any other phase of the food industry. We will oppose any action that may be taken before the legislature to legalize any such municipal authority as being detrimental to the interests of agricultural producers and consumers.

RESOLUTION 19. COOPERATIVE INCOME TAX

The income-tax laws and regulations covering cooperatives are not a handicap to other types of business organizations nor have they caused any serious loss of revenue to the Government.

The council of agriculture, therefore, requests our Congressmen and Senators to oppose any changes in the law governing income taxes on cooperatives.

RESOLUTION 21. LIVESTOCK DISEASE CONTROL

Wisconsin dairy and livestock farmers are dependent on sales of dairy and livestock and their products. Livestock diseases cause tremendous losses to farmers and to consumers.

We believe that the administration of livestock sanitation and disease control can be most effectively done through present administrative channels, and we commend the Department of Agriculture in its recent efforts to improve and expand the administrative program of this division.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

STATEHOOD FOR ALASKA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. LUCAS to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 331) to provide for the admission of Alaska into the Union.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to take the floor for a few moments in the endeavor to discover whether or not it is going to be possible to reach a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the motion of the majority leader to consider the Alaska statehood bill. Before propounding any unanimous-consent request, however, I desire to make a few observations about the condition in which we find ourselves.

There have been numerous reports and rumors that if the Alaska statehood bill should be made the unfinished business a full scale filibuster would be undertaken against it. As I said the other day when I opened the discussion on the subject, it is wholly within the authority, the power and the right of any Senator to take full advantage of the rule of unlimited debate in the Senate of the United States. It occurs to me, however, that in this crucial period of world history, when the present session, which opened on the 27th of November, must of necessity adjourn before the Eighty-second Congress takes over, we should clearly understand what we are doing.

Dispatches from Paris tell us that the whole French Cabinet resigned because Members of the French Chamber of Deputies were taking full exercise of their parliamentary rights; this at a period when the whole cause of human freedom and parliamentary institutions hangs in the balance.

Mr. President, it has been suggested that the two Territories should not be admitted to the Union. Arguments against their admission to the Union have been advanced by some Senators on and off the floor who are regarded as defenders of States' rights. I desire to point out that opposition to statehood is not support of States' rights.

Opposition to statehood for Alaska and Hawaii is really a declaration that the power of the Federal Government shall continue to be exercised over these Territories and over the people who live in them.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am one of those who object to transferring the sovereignty of Hawaii and Alaska from the Federal Government to new and untried State governments at this time, and I regard that position as being utterly consistent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I will say that there is no question before the Senate of transferring the power at this time. The bills in question, if they ever come before the Senate are authorizations to the people of the respective Territories to draft constitutions and to submit them to Congress. The Congress of the United States at some future time will have to pass upon the admission. So it is not a question now of transfer of authority at this moment or this year or possibly next year to a new State or States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The distinguished Senator from Wyoming is either very skillfully splitting hairs or he is much more optimistic than I am as to the trend of world events. I hope and pray that within the next 10 or 12 months the skies will lighten and that the clouds will pass. But unless I very seriously misjudge the situation, we are in for a period of crisis for many years to come. I repeat, there is absolutely nothing that is inconsistent or contradictory in defending the rights of the States and in opposing the making of new States, which will fix an obligation on the Federal Government to defend their rights in case of any great emergency. Should these Territories be admitted into the United States, either today or next year, I would feel bound to fight for their rights as vigorously as I would defend the rights of Georgia or Wyoming, and I do not think I care to be placed in that position when we do not know but that a terrific blow will be leveled at one of those outposts either tomorrow or 6 months from tomorrow.

I have also been interested to note that many of those who heretofore have had no interest in States' rights, are now vigorously supporting Alaska on the theory that some rights of States are involved. Rights of individual citizens of the United States are involved; but in those Territories no States' rights are involved until the Congress wishes to assume the responsibility of creating States out of them and then defending them in their rights.

Mr. President, this comment is not personally directed to the Senator from Wyoming; but, to my mind, some of those who most vigorously espouse the cause of statehood, hope that statehood will be achieved for those Territories in order to get more votes in the Congress in order to be able to take away the few rights which now remain to the sovereign States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, of course I understand the position the Senator from Georgia has taken. He made his expression, however, before I had completed my statement.

I say that failure to extend statehood to these Territories will inevitably result in the continued exercise of the power of the Federal Government over them, their resources, and their people. Because of the critical international situation in which we find ourselves, it will be necessary for the central government to exercise more power; and, in time, it may become very difficult indeed to loosen the hand of the Federal Government upon the resources and the Territory, particularly those of the Alaska area.

However, Mr. President, my point is merely to lay the preliminary basis of this discussion as to whether we are going to have a vote. I say that it seems to me a little strange and almost terrifying that in this hour of national danger we should be insisting upon full, parliamentary, technical rights. The time has come, it seems to me, when all the people of the United States, and particularly all of us who bear any of the responsibilities of government, must recognize the fact that free government is in danger throughout the world.

We cannot continue "legislation as usual." If it becomes necessary—and it is necessary—for us to appropriate large sums of money for national defense; if we are going to take further steps, as there is no doubt that we shall, to defend the soldiers of America who by our authority are carrying the Stars and Stripes in Korea; if we are going to defend those whom we have asked to defend us, we are going to make appropriations without limit. When we make those appropriations without limit, either we shall have a tremendous expansion of the deficit or we shall raise additional taxes.

We know that even now debate is going on as to whether we should pass a timid tax bill to protect special interests or whether we should pass a tax bill which will raise the revenue required to be raised in order that we may do the things we must do. Every Member of Congress who knows about the economic situation must realize that if we make the huge appropriations by which we are going to divert our industrial might to the production of the instruments of war, controls will be necessary.

We know that we cannot permit the cost of living to continue to rise. We know that we cannot permit rent costs to rise. We are talking about an extension of rent control for 2 or 3 months. Mr. President, if we really mean business in defense of the men we have sent to Korea, we cannot be timid about the things which must be done. If we are going to spend these days in a fruitless debate designed to prevent an overwhelming majority of the Senate from voting upon this issue, then it seems to me the country ought to know it.

There are some of us who believe that the passage of these two measures is essential as an element of national defense. I was not engaging in oratory or in any appeal to the emotions when I said to the Senate the other day that the Territory of Alaska is separated from Soviet Siberia by only 58 miles across the Bering Straits. I was not engaging in an emotional appeal or a forensic flight when I said that Hawaii, in the center of the Pacific, is the focus upon which the oriental eye is now centered, and that the word will go out all through the Pacific area if the Congress of the United States, by the vote of the Senate, by the delays of the Senate, should say "No, you people in Hawaii may not come into the Union of States."

Mr. President, Hawaii and Alaska are incorporated Territories of the United States. Every lawyer in this body knows that an incorporated Territory is a Territory to which the Constitution of the United States has been extended in such a way that it can not secede from the Federal Union, nor can the Congress of the United States cut it loose, within the law. Territories are different from the mandated islands of the Pacific. They are different from other areas which have temporarily come within our control because the peoples there do not have an economic basis for freedom. These are incorporated Territories of the United States, and in the interest of national defense it seems to me to be clear that they should be admitted into the Union.

However, that is neither here nor there; that is only my opinion. I may be wrong.

One thing I am sure of is that we should have a vote upon the merits, and that we should not undertake now to prolong the discussion by debate upon irrelevant matters, when so many pressing things confront us to be done.

This morning the President of the United States at a press conference, so I am informed, declared that the Executive is now giving consideration to the use of the A-bomb upon the Red puppets of Soviet Russia. I am very glad that statement has been made; I expected such a statement to come from the President. I have no doubt that the President of the United States, who himself served in the Armed Forces during World War I, and General Marshall, the Secretary of Defense, who served in the armed services during World War I and who directed World War II from the exalted position which he held in our military forces, will exercise every military power of the United States to defend the American soldiers we sent into Korea. They are entitled to have that defense, but they are also entitled to know that their Congress in Washington is not wasting time in dilatory discussion over matters which so large a number of the Members of the Congress believe to be vital to the national defense.

Mr. President, I have spoken vigorously because I feel deeply, because I feel keenly. I want to see the democratic process continue here in the Capital of the United States and throughout the world. But we are in grave danger of losing the democratic progress. So, Mr. President, let us determine whether there is any possibility of reaching a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the motion of the majority leader to consider the Alaska bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the motion to consider the Alaska statehood bill shall cease at 4 o'clock on Friday afternoon, and that the Senate shall then proceed immediately to a vote upon the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule, it may be that a quorum is required in this connection.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I may suggest that we had a quorum call but a short time ago.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, am I not correct in believing that the rule does not require a quorum call under the circumstances?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that under the circumstances a quorum call is not required. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. EASTLAND. I object.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object if the Senator will make the request for Monday—a large number of Senators are absent from the city over the week end, and others plan to be out of the city on Monday. I do, however, wish to make a brief comment on the Senator's very impassioned and eloquent statement. The Senator spoke with more vigor and fervor than usual, and he is always a very vigorous and persuasive speaker. I merely desire to observe that there are some of us who are as firmly convinced that the ends of national defense would be served not by admitting these Territories to statehood at this time, as the Senator from Wyoming is convinced that their admission would defeat Russia's propaganda and perhaps save the country in the event of war.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May we not decide that upon the merits, instead of upon a preliminary motion?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have stated that I do not intend to object, if the Senator will make the request for Monday. I think it is a very reasonable request.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should be very much disposed to agree with the Senator and make the request for Monday.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, it is a fact, in my opinion, that today this country is in graver danger than it ever was during World War II. During World War II it was found necessary to place great areas in Hawaii under military law. Had Hawaii been a State of the Union at that time, that, in my opinion, could not have been done. It was thought necessary to do it during World War II, and it was done. If we are in the grave danger, which I apprehend confronts this Nation, the hand of the Federal Government in defending its most vital outposts should not be tied in this period by admitting the two Territories to statehood and starting them off with new governments and with such rights as remain to the States. Such action, in my opinion, would be calculated to destroy the rights of all the States, because of the steps which it would be necessary to take in the States of Hawaii and Alaska, if they were admitted, for the reason that it would be impossible to apply a rule in Alaska, if it were a State or in Hawaii, if it were a State, that would not apply to the State of Pennsylvania or the State of Illinois, which are already in the Union.

Mr. President, I wish again to observe that I am not impressed by any argument, however eloquent, no matter how vigorously delivered, that is predicated upon the idea that we in the Senate should vote to combat Russian propaganda. The Senate would be chasing will-o'-the-wisps everywhere if it undertook to pass bills in order to nail lies. If we ever combat Russian propaganda, it is going to be because we put the simple truth against the great lie and hope and pray that an all-wise Providence will see that the truth prevails. For my part, I shall never cast a vote here, nor desist from speaking on this floor, with any idea that I am going to be able to defeat Russian propaganda.

The Senator from Wyoming eloquently explains the distinction between the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and Guam. Who is going to explain it to those behind the iron curtain, when Russia transfers its propaganda from Hawaii and Alaska to Guam, Samoa, Puerto Rico, or the Virgin Islands? We shall have no one there with the legal ability which the Senator from Wyoming displays, to show them that there is any difference or any distinction. All that would happen would be that the Russian propagandists would strike out "Hawaii" and "Alaska" from their transparent lies about our imperialistic designs and our colonial concept, and insert the word "Samoa," or the word "Guam," or the words "Puerto Rico," and carry on the propaganda. Would it then behoove the Senate immediately to say we were going to grant statehood to Guam and to the Virgin Islands and to Puerto Rico, merely in order to answer the Russian propaganda?

In their propaganda the Russians have attacked the founding fathers who wrote the Constitution of the United States. There have been those who thought it was a great document. I believe it was Gladstone who said it was the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man. The Russians say that it was written by the malefactors of great wealth in the Colonies, in order to keep all of the people in bondage. Are we going to follow the concept that, because of Russian propaganda, we must take certain action? If so we will eventually get around to repealing the Constitution of the United States.

So I desire to serve notice on the Senate that, while I shall not object to voting on the motion to consider this bill, if the Senator from Wyoming makes the request on Monday, I shall not omit any word that I intended to say upon the merits of the bill. I hope that no other Senator will be intimidated by what I regard as being a ridiculous idea, that the action of the Senate is going to result in the calling off of Russian propaganda. It cannot be done in that way. When people have no conception of the truth, and when they think a lie is preferable to the truth, Senators would then make of themselves a group of fools to endeavor to combat that kind of propaganda by passing bills. We would never catch up with the lie. We would be chasing shadows, and the will-o'-the wisp would be a thing of substance compared to the action of the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I merely rose—the Senator will excuse me for digressing—to say that I shall not be deterred one iota from addressing myself to the merits of the bill by the distinguished Senator's remarks, persuasive as they were, and I trust that no other Senator will restrain himself from expressing his opinion on this vital question.

This is not a claim bill to pay some unfortunate citizen who was run over by an Army truck. It is an important matter, and even if it is in the political platform of every town and parish, the United States should look carefully at any motion to bring new and additional States into the great sisterhood of States with the dignity the States used to enjoy, and which I hope can be in some small measure restored when we have saner days in this Nation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am very grateful that the Senator from Georgia has indicated that he will not object if I modify the request by substituting Monday for Friday. I intend to do that, but, first, let me say the Senator misunderstand me completely if he gained the idea that I ever said or thought that the passage of these bills would stop Russian propaganda. Of course, it will not. I said, and I repeat, that, in my opinion, the passage of these bills will be the answer to Russian propaganda in the minds of people who are ready to accept the American protestations of our support of self-determination. So, Mr. President, I now submit the modified request for unanimous consent to vote on the motion not later than 3 o'clock on Monday afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EASTLAND. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very happy to yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I wonder whether the Senator from Wyoming can give me an explanation of a matter which has bothered me somewhat during the last few days. The Senator may know that I was one of the original sponsors of the Alaska statehood bill. It was understood that the native population of Alaska was very much in favor of statehood. Yesterday and today, however, I have received communications from certain persons claiming to represent the Indians, or at least the interests of the Indians, in which they state that the bill, since its introduction, has been amended in such a way as to deprive the Indians of certain rights, or of rights to a certain degree, which they now hold.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say without further ado that those reports are without a shred of basis and that the rights of the natives are preserved. The amendment to which the Senator refers is the amendment adopted unanimously, as I recall, by the committee, which merely provides that the Federal Government, by Executive order, shall not, during the pendency of the statehood question in Alaska and the drawing of the constitution, create new reservations by Executive order. That is very different from the story which has come to the Senator. That amendment preserves the rights of the Indians, and it gives to the people of Alaska the opportunity to show that they believe in native rights. I may say to the Senator that the record before the committee clearly demonstrates that in Alaska the natives have been received without any discrimination upon the basis of race, creed, or color.

Mr. AIKEN. However, the communications which I have received state quite clearly that the Indian population, or the native population, has reversed its position in regard to the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is erroneous, and, at the proper time, I shall be very glad to prove that to be the case. However, I desire to say to the Senator that, objection having been made to my request for unanimous consent that we should fix a time certain for a vote upon the preliminary motion to consider the bill, I, for my part, do not propose to participate in any dilatory speeches; so I am about to surrender the floor.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, if the Senator yields to me long enough to complete my statement, I should like to say that if, as the Senator says, the native population of Alaska has not reversed its position, and if the bill as written is satisfactory to me, I still wish to have it understood, as a member of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, that I feel obliged to carry out the virtual promise which the committee has made to make the railway labor bill the first business of this session. I also wish to make it clear that in so voting I do so without prejudice to the Alaska statehood bill, which I shall still support if I find the native people of Alaska have not reversed their position.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator for his statement. With respect to the railway labor bill, I had intended to vote for it when it was before the Senate in August. I would still vote for it. When we opened the session on Monday I stated on the floor of the Senate that if the railway labor bill were not to be used merely as a device for preventing a vote on the Alaska statehood bill I would have no objection to its being considered. If it were to be taken up for the purpose of having a vote on it I would have no objection. Indeed, Mr. President, I am ready now to submit another unanimous-consent request.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, is the Senator making another unanimous-consent request, or is he submitting an amendment to the unanimous-consent request previously submitted by him?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I intended to make another unanimous-consent request. However, if the Senator wishes to apply the rule with respect to a quorum call, which I believe would be the correct procedure, I shall not make another request. I shall simply say what I had in mind. Perhaps a better time will be presented within which to make such a request. If unanimous consent were requested that at a time certain before the end of this week we should vote on the railway labor bill, which is now on the calendar, I would not object to such a unanimous-consent agreement. However, I wish to make it clear, definite, and certain that I have not expressed myself in opposition to the railway labor bill. The bill was put aside because on the day on which Congress reconvened the Senator in charge of the bill was detained, and the chairman of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare said he would be willing to have the bill laid aside in view of the urgency of the statehood bill.

Furthermore, it was clear when the Senate adjourned last September a motion to recommit the railway labor bill was about to be made, and probably would have carried. It is also clear that a rule has never been granted on the bill by the House Committee on Rules. Therefore it seems to me to be obvious that it would be futile to take it up with any hope of enacting it into law. However, I shall not object to the bill. On the other hand, the statehood bills have been passed by the House. If the Senate should pass them they would be sent to the White House. They will be killed if we continue to debate the motion to take up the first of the bills, or continue to discuss irrelevant matters.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I should like to join the Senator from Wyoming in expressing the hope that an early vote may be had on both bills.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest that the Senator from Vermont consult the leadership on his side and other members of the minority. I shall do the same on this side of the aisle. Then we can see whether or not we can agree on a unanimous-consent request. If it is at all possible to do so, I shall be glad to join the Senator.

Mr. AIKEN. If I may be permitted to complete my statement, I wish to say that I am also fully cognizant of the fact that if certain Members of the Senate do not desire to vote on the statehood bill before the 1st of January, they have previously demonstrated their ample ability to postpone a vote. I should not want to let the Alaska statehood bill stand in the way of securing a vote on the railway labor bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. There is no unanimous-consent request now before the Senate, is there?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not.

Mr. WHERRY. The question is on the motion made by the majority leader to consider the Alaska statehood bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Vote.

COMMUNIST PROPAGANDA

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate for more than 15 minutes. In view of the fact that every Senator and nearly everyone else is concerned with the world situation I have caused to be prepared some very brief remarks which I should like to present to the Senate this afternoon. My remarks relate to the very important subject of how we should meet the impact of Russian propaganda or the Russian offensive.

Mr. President, for years everyone has been accepting as a fact that the Kremlin is seeking to take over the world. Today we are faced with the most significant challenge—and this is common language on the streets by everyone, both high and low—since the shooting stopped after the Second World War. The real question is: What are we doing about it? Or, to put it in another way: Where do we go from here?

With the advent of the twentieth century a new type of warfare emerged. The new type of warfare is organized psychological warfare, designed to capture the minds of men. Germany used it. Russia is now using it very effectively.

In the Reader's Digest of November there appeared an article by C. W. Boldyreff. To me it presented very challenging reading. It called to mind that 2 years before, when I was privileged to represent this body at a conference in Bermuda similar to the one which will be held shortly in Australia—and I happened to be the chairman of the delegation—we discussed the subject of how best to meet the Russian offensive. We discussed such practical things as penetration. We must remember that during the American Revolution and the War of 1812 the British at times used Indians against us very effectively. Mr. President, I should like to know what our leaders, military and executive, are doing in connection with meeting offensively the challenge which is causing the world to be in its present very serious condition.

There still seems to be a vague and confusing outlook as to what we are going to do about it. Our boys in Korea know what they have to do about it. Are we supporting them as much as we should? Let us look at the map; or, as one famous American has said, let us look at the record.

Since World War II, Russia has been rapidly expanding. One freedom-loving country after another has gone from freedom into slavery. Sometimes it has occurred through the blandishments and promises of cooperation of the Soviet Russian Government, sometimes by internal penetration, and sometimes by developing the determined might of dissident elements. But in each instance, whether it be Poland, Czechoslovakia, or China, the net result has always been slavery. The question still remains: What are we going to do about it?

The Russian Government has adopted a concrete, realistic plan of penetrating all freedom-loving countries for the purpose of demoralizing them, mentally and spiritually from within, and resorting to force when necessary. For a long time the people of this country could not bring themselves to believe that their supposed ally in World War II was actually intending to bring about their destruction. But this picture is, I hope, rapidly changing.

Certainly with the Chinese troops pouring into Korea by the hundred thousand the very conscience of America is now alerted to the fact that the Kremlin has given the green light and that the Chinese are pouring into Korea on the orders of the Kremlin.

Professor Boldyreff, in his thought-provoking article, points out that by using a psychological offensive in the form of propaganda against the Russian Government, as distinguished from the Russian people, that it is possible to persuade the freedom-loving elements behind the iron curtain to strike a blow for freedom. I ask Senators to read that article in the November Reader's Digest.

Recently an attorney in Los Angeles, Ben S. Beery by name, has published a program for psychological offensive against the Soviet Government. He has had some experience in the propaganda field. He is familiar with the techniques used to destroy or undermine the confidence the enslaved people may yet have in their government. His plan is of such a comprehensive nature that I feel that the Members of the Senate of the United States and the American people should have the benefit of his program. It is worthy of going into the RECORD, and I ask that it be inserted at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, in the first place, it must be realized that we are actually in a war. We may call it a cold war, a warm war, or a hot war, but we are, nevertheless, in an actual war, fighting for our freedom. Mr. Beery has conducted serious research in the theory of warfare and eminent military authority for his premise that war consists of two things—physical force and the spirit with which to wield it.

Assuming that we are in an actual undeclared war, it is necessary that we make an attack upon the spirit of our enemy, the Soviet Russian Government, as well as being prepared with the weapons and implements of physical war.

According to Hanson W. Baldwin, Napoleon said:

> There are only two powers in the world—the sword and the spirit. In the long run, the sword is always defeated by the spirit.

Therefore, let us build up our spiritual armament to take an offensive against the Soviet Russian Government. It so happens that behind the iron curtain there are people who love freedom. It has been stated that of the 200,000,000 Russians, at least 190,000,000 of them are subject to the impact we could make, if we know how to make it.

The statement has been made that there is scarcely a family in Russia of which at least one member has not been liquidated or put into a concentration camp. Let us stop a moment and ask ourselves what kind of soil that creates if we have the yeast, the ferment, to plant. Think of it, there is not a family of which some member has not either been liquidated or put into a concentration camp.

There are people in Russia who want to have a representative government, who want to enhance the dignity of man rather than enslave them. I presume that in Russia they are called dissident elements. These elements must be appealed to, they must be organized, they must be prepared to hamper, obstruct, and eventually assist the free people behind the iron curtain to obtain their liberty. Our spiritual warfare must not be defensive. It must be offensive in substance.

Any nation that becomes defensive-minded has thereby established the prelude to disaster, and its ultimate decay. History reveals that no nation that has been on the defensive only has ever survived against the attack of an armed enemy. We must abandon forever the defensive attitude that has been adopted by some people in our Government, and become offensive-minded.

As a first step, we should establish a real vital propaganda agency that will carry truth to the people held in bondage by the Soviet Russian Government. We must carry the yeast or ferment to the 190,000,000 and arouse them, so that the people held in bondage by the Soviet government will feel that they want bondage no more.

I am not unmindful of the fact that there has been a purported crusade of truth. But it is not strong enough, and it does not go far enough to meet the serious need with which we are faced. It fairly well limits itself to giving truthful statements about the United States. According to eminent authorities, however, the people of Russia are not interested in how many automobiles we own. They are simply interested in what they can get by way of freedom and a better way of life if they have a representative government. Hence, rather than telling those people how good our conditions are in this country, we must try to drive a psychological wedge between the Russian Government and the Russian people.

This can be done in manifold ways. There are many who claim that our propaganda cannot reach the Russian people, and they look to the obstacles preventing our reaching the Russian people rather than looking to the ultimate goal.

When Hannibal wanted to cross the Alps and invade Rome, he was told by the faint-hearted that he could not cross the Alps that there was no way across the Alps, and he replied: "I will either find a way or make one."

As to these faint-hearted people who feel that we cannot get our propaganda to the Russian people, we can properly say, in the words of Hannibal: "We will either find a way or make one."

We can, if we have the will and the ingenuity, get this propaganda to the Russian people.

I was very much interested in an article I read in the newspaper a week ago Sunday, I believe it was, prepared by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], in which he spoke about the significance of building, at a rather small expense, television sets, which would penetrate the border states of Russia, which would set forth factually, by pictures, the things which are necessary to create the ferment in the soil about which I have been speaking.

Propaganda, however, is not enough. In addition to getting our story to the Russian people, we must also penetrate the iron curtain. It was once stated by a man of great courage that the things which man creates, man can destroy. The evil Russian Government has created the man-made iron curtain, and the inflexible determination of those desiring freedom can penetrate it. We well remember that the French felt that their Maginot line was an impenetrable defense, but nevertheless the hordes of Hitler found a way around it and overran it and the French people.

We can find a way around or through the iron curtain, and by the voice of truth dispel the fear and terror which now enshrouds the people in bondage.

Having decided with fixed determination to penetrate the iron curtain, we should immediately start—and this is important—to organize the underground movements and the unhappy elements behind it. There are many skilled underground operators in the satellite countries, and there are likewise many of them in some parts of Russia, such as the Ukraine.

That is what Russia has been doing, that is what she is doing in Korea today, that is what she is doing in the United States through her agents. I was one of those who joined in the resolution which was submitted today by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], which indicates that we here want to take the offensive, and that we should put a little iron in our system, so as to be able to meet the offensive of the Russians on our own soil with an offensive which will put them out of this country.

These people should be organized, they should be trained, equipped, so that they cannot only spread propaganda, but create further confusion and disruption within the Communist orbit. We cannot be so heartless as to simply feed these people to the Russian secret police. We must train them and equip them to protect themselves.

What are we doing in China today? We know that through the centuries there have been overlords in that country. I understand that there is considerable confusion in China today. Are we giving them a problem such as the one they are giving us? We have to fight with 1950 weapons. We cannot use mid-Victorian technique in the atomic age.

But having trained those people, and having equipped them to protect themselves, and having given them the psychological tools, they with the aid of our outside propaganda, can possibly end this unhappy era, in which the world is divided into two camps, one consisting of those of us who love freedom and the dignity of mankind; the second, those who abhor freedom and want slavery.

The details of the Program for Psychological Offensive Against the Soviet Government, prepared by Ben S. Beery, an attorney of 912 Rowan Building, 458 South Spring Street, Los Angeles 13, Calif., are too comprehensive for me to give them at this time. Furthermore, they should be studied by every Senator. So I have asked that his plan be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, we can spend our time between now and Christmas debating what in my opinion are secondary measures. I feel that the real problem before America today is that of putting our house in order economically. I believe we have to recognize that with the additional demand from the President for a billion dollars, with the increased costs of preparedness, and with the demand to put into operation some law which will give us more military effectiveness, our duty is to seek to put our house in order so that no matter what may impact us, we will be able to absorb the impact.

Putting it concretely I think we should consider now, first, the most effective way of raising sufficient funds so that we will not further deplete the value of our dollar. Second, we should consider immediately the question of what should be done in relation to stabilizing prices and wages. Third, we should consider the matter of checking costs, in other words, the checking of procurement costs in the military. We spent $50,000,000,000 for defense purposes, and yet when the Korean situation came upon us we were practically defenseless. I trust that when we spend the next $50,000,000,000 we will receive dollar value for every dollar spent. But temptations are great, and it is our job as legislators, not to consider minor details and secondary matters when primary matters should have our attention.

Mr. President, on Tuesday last when the President of the Senate informed me that he had appointed me as one member of the committee to go to Australia to attend the meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, I considered the matter, and I may say that I had a great desire to go, because, as I have previously stated, I was one of the Members of the Senate who represented the Senate and the Government at a meeting held in Bermuda 2 years ago when the representatives of the British Commonwealth of Nations gathered there. But when the news broke from Korea I felt the situation was so critical in a world sense that, in view of those circumstances, I could not go to Australia. I so informed the Vice President at that time. As a consequence I am not going on that trip. I feel that my place is here, that my job is here.

We do not know even from hour to hour, what the future may bring. Mr. President, I feel it is important that the Senate remain in session now to handle questions, small or large, that will come before us, and which must be solved. I wanted to make my position a matter of record, to indicate why, after the news broke in Korea, I made up my mind not to go to Australia.

EXHIBIT A

I

Definition of propaganda: Propaganda, for the purpose of this proposed agency, may be defined as the truthful teaching that:

(A) Man has an inalienable right to all liberty that does not infringe upon another's right.

(B) A government obtains its just powers through the consent of the governed.

(C) Any state that does not recognize the truth or I (A) and I (B) is of necessity opposed to all freedom loving peoples, and, if it seeks world conquest, it must be destroyed.

(D) The Soviet Russian Government and the governments of its satellites are embraced within the terms of I (C) and must be destroyed.

II

The objectives of propaganda are:

(A) To win converts among the people enslaved by the Russian Government to a belief in freedom, in a representative form of government, and in what is commonly called our way of life.

(B) To destroy the Russian Government and the governments of its satellites and replace them with governments that will truly represent the people governed, that will believe in freedom, and that will be freely chosen by the people to be governed.

III

The subjects of propaganda: The foregoing objectives set forth in II can be accomplished through propaganda which will:

(A) Undermine the confidence of the people in the Communist governments. To do this the propaganda should—

1. Expand and enlarge all differences and cleavages between the totalitarian governments and the people under their control.

2. Assist in the organization and development of underground movements in Russia and her satellite states.

3. Give instructions to these underground movements.

4. Give instructions (undoubtedly in code) to espionage agents operating behind the iron curtain.

5. Teach the enslaved people that their governments are corrupt and do so by telling them the absolute truth.

6. Compare the life of the people under the totalitarian regime with that existing in the freedom loving countries. This teaching should embrace the following fields: Economic, political, religious, educational, miscellaneous.

7. Show that the totalitarian governments plan world conquest.

8. Instill defeatism in the minds of those under the Soviet regime and show them that the ultimate result to them of the plan for world conquest will be disaster.

9. Alter the psychology of the enslaved people so that they will hate their own governments and crave freedom.

(B) Build hope for the future in the people now dominated by the Russian Government in the event they overthrow their masters. In order to do that the propaganda should—

1. Teach the enslaved people the meaning of:

(a) Freedom of speech.

(b) Freedom of the press.

(c) Freedom of religion.

(d) Freedom from unreasonable search and seizure.

(e) Fair and just judicial proceedings.

(f) How reforms can be obtained without revolution or violence.

(g) The theory of free government and how it operates.

2. Amplify what their life could be like under a free government. As a complement to this, fear should be created in their minds as to what will happen if they fail to overthrow their present government.

IV

Philosophy governing our propaganda.

(A) It must consist of absolute truth.

(B) It must always constitute an attack on the totalitarian governments. If an answer to false propaganda is required, it should be coupled with an attack on the Communist regime and should never be defensive. All propaganda should always be offensive.

V

Means to be used:

(A) Radio.

(B) Literature.

(C) Photographs.

(D) Special items.

(E) Public relations to inform American people of what is being done by the agency.

VI

Integration with other agencies and with departments:

In order to be successful, the propaganda agency must be integrated with other agencies and departments of our Government so that it can assist in carrying out and making effective their policies. As the basis for this integration proper liaison should be established with:

(A) Department of Defense.

(B) Department of State, and possibly Foreign Offices of other freedom-loving nations.

(C) Department of Justice, particularly the Federal Bureau of Investigation, for security reasons.

VII

Organization:

This agency should be a separate agency not under the control of the Department of State, Department of Defense, or Department of Justice, but should cooperate with them. If possible, it should be arranged so that the actual propaganda could be disseminated under the name of the United Nations, and if this is done, there should be cooperation with similar agencies in the other freedom-loving countries.

The internal organization should consist of at least the following personnel and divisions:

(A) Head of agency.

(B) First assistant manager, who would be the assistant to the head of the agency.

(C) Second assistant manager, who would be an administrative assistant to handle the office organization, personnel, budget, and finances, etc.

(D) An executive committee consisting of the following:

1. Manager.

2. First assistant manager.

3. Second assistant manager.

4. Representative of the Department of Justice.

5. Representative of the Departmnt of Defense.

6. Representative of the State Department.

7. Head of analytical division of agency.

8. Head of radio division of agency.

9. Head of literature and photographs division of agency.

10. Head of special events division of agency.

11. Head of public relations division of agency.

12. Head of methods of dissemination division of agency.

The executive committee should have the right to determine policies and operations to be undertaken within the scope of the work to be done by the agency.

(E) An advisory committee to advise the executive committee in regard to problems referred to it by the executive committee and in regard to other activities which it believes should be undertaken or considered. In this connection it is felt that the advisory committee should consist of representative citizens, particularly in legal, educational, religious, and scientific fields, who would receive no compensation but whose expenses would be paid.

(F) Divisions of agency.

1. Analytical.
2. Radio.
3. Literature and photography.
4. Special events.
5. Security.
6. Underground activities.
7. Military activities.
8. Research.
9. Budget and finance.
10. Personnel.
11. Public relations.
12. Methods of dissemination.

SUPPLEMENT

I. DEFINITION OF PROPAGANDA

The word "propaganda" at the present time has a rather odious connotation. This was not always the case, as originally it meant the teaching of religious doctrines to missionaries to enable them to convert pagans.

In 1623 Pope Urban VIII established a college in Italy for the teaching and training of missionaries and called it the College of Propaganda. The word was not popularly used from that time until World War I, when it was used to define statements intended to cause the Allies to hate all things German. In view of some of the exaggerations and distortions used during World War I, the word began to mean that which was distorted, and ultimately came to mean falsehood.

It is important that the word propaganda should mean the teaching of truth, and the whole program that is outlined is predicated upon the use of the absolute truth to cause the peoples now enslaved to abhor their slavery and to earnestly desire freedom. Hitler predicated his propaganda upon what he called "great lies"; we should found ours upon truth. It is realized that adherence to the truth may reduce, for a short period, some of the spectacular results that can temporarily be gained by falsehoods, but over a long time truth will be more effective.

To accomplish the desired result, people under Soviet domination must understand what liberty means and also appreciate the workings and operation of a free government. They can be shown that the Russian Government is their enemy as well as ours and that it must be destroyed.

II. OBJECTIVES

The objectives of propaganda, as set forth in the outline, namely, first to win converts to the cause of freedom, and secondly, to destroy the enemies of freedom, is similar to the fundamental foundation upon which Hitler based his propaganda organization. His definition of the objectives of propaganda was that the first task of propaganda was to win converts to the party, and the second task of propaganda was to destroy the existing order and replace it with the Nazi regime. The differences between Hitler's propaganda organization and the one proposed are in their purposes and methods. Hitler's purpose was to destroy freedom, and ours is to preserve and expand it; his method was the great lie; ours is the truth.

III. SUBJECTS OF PROPAGANDA

A–1. Cleavages: All propaganda at first finds its most fertile soil among those persons who are dissatisfied with existing conditions. Study should continuously be made of all fields of activity behind the iron curtain to discover important sources of disagreement and hatred, and these should be continually exploited in an effort to intensify ill will of the people toward the Russian or its puppet governments.

Care must be taken to be sure that—

(a) The matter of discord is of sufficient importance to permit its exploitation to effect a sizable segment of the people.

(b) The facts concerning the disagreement will permit propaganda supporting our objectives.

(c) This particular effort may develop a new source of cleavage.

A–2, 3, and 4, Underground movements: The organization and development of underground movements and instructions to them are matters which should be undertaken only in cooperation with the Department of State and the Department of Defense. The greatest secrecy must prevail in this work, and in this field propaganda should be used only in furtherance of plans jointly approved by those departments and this agency. In considering these plans, only the representative of the Department of State, the representative of the Department of Defense, the head of the division of this agency on underground activities (Outline, VII, F–6), the head of the division of this agency on military activities (Outline, VII, F–7), and the head of the agency, or in his absence his first assistant, should be permitted to participate.

A–5. Corruption of Communist governments: Demonstration that the Communist governments are corrupt could be accomplished by telling facts. Statements made by Russian officials and by her controlled press could be compared with eyewitness reports and possibly by United Nations reports. This propaganda can be very dramatic and should always begin and end with the definite charge that the Russian Government and those of its satellites are trying to deceive the people (see supp. III, A–7, infra).

A–6. Life in Russia compared with life in free countries: The comparison between life under Communist governments with that in the free countries can be very effective. For instance, tell the number of hours a Russian laborer has to toil to get a pair of shoes and then compare it with the hours that an American works to get the same thing. Also, one could well compare the homes and comforts of workmen in this country with those in Russia. The program should begin and end with the suggestion that the enslaved people could have as good a life as free people if only they would overthrow their masters.

Similar work could be carried on in regard to the political, religious, educational, and other fields.

A–7. Russia's plan of world conquest: To show that Russia intends world conquest, statements of Lenin, Stalin, and others could be used and compared with Russia's present claims that it stands for peace. Also, the people could be told how Russia failed to consent to free inspection of uranium production and refinement when we consented to the control of the use of the atom bomb. This is a fertile field that can be constantly exploited.

A–8. Defeatism: When a people cease to believe in the righteousness of their cause, defeatism inevitably follows. The constant reiteration of the propaganda heretofore mentioned will develop defeatism. It can be expanded by calling attention to the disaster that came to the German people when their bid for world conquest failed.

A–9. Change psychology of enslaved people: The alteration of the psychology of the people of Russia, and its satellite states, so that they would hate their own governments and crave freedom, will be the end product of all of the foregoing propaganda. This change in psychology can be accelerated by special forms of propaganda, created and changed from time to time and to suit the particular condition. This subparagraph is included in the outline to permit their development and use as the occasion arises.

B–1 and B–2. Hope for those held in bondage: Paragraphs A–1 to A–9 cover what might well be called destructive propaganda, as they are directed to the destruction of the Russian Government. These paragraphs, B–1 and B–2, may well be designated constructive propaganda. The borderline between the two types is somewhat hazy in certain instances.

For example, the educational matter, mentioned in A–6 can be used to undermine the Russian Government and at the same time to train the people to carry on a free government once it becomes established. Other examples could be given to show the borderline types, but little confusion will arise. B–1 and B–2 are constructive and primarily educational. The constructive and the destructive types should be interspersed with each other to accomplish the greatest effectiveness.

IV. PHILOSOPHY GOVERNING OUR PROPAGANDA

A. Truth must be the watchword of our propaganda, and any deviation from truth by any employee of the agency should be cause for immediate dismissal.

B. Our propaganda must always constitute an offensive operation; it must always attack, forever attack, attack here, attack there, but in every case—attack.

This is not similar to the problem facing the military commander. He must gage his effort with his supplies and his men. In the propaganda field, the facilities are always open to one so that he can attack. The fact that we have confined ourselves to the realm of truth does not limit us, as the enemy, Russia, is evil and she becomes no better because we have agreed to tell the truth about her. She is still wicked. The only limiting aspect of our propaganda is our ingenuity and our will.

For years, we have undergone attacks by Russia and now the initiative must pass to us, if we are to succeed.

It has been claimed that this will cause Russia to start world war III. Though there is a risk that this may happen, it is doubtful. In the first place, Russia has nothing but contempt for words, and in the second place, Russia will start a war only when she is ready and feels that she cannot gain her ends by other means.

If this program is instituted, the Soviet Government probably will pay little attention to it at first. Later, as the effect of our propaganda begins to be felt, she may well be so busy at home that she will be unable to do much about it. Her favorable opportunity for world conquest could be lost, because while she is being weakened by the propaganda, we will be getting stronger.

It should be borne in mind that this program does not replace military preparedness; neither does it in any way modify military strategy or tactics. It simply weakens one's enemy, in this case Russia, psychologically; it destroys her will to conquer, and makes her more easily subject to military attack. Hitler is reported to have said that he would never start a war without the moral certainty that the enemy would collapse from within at the first stroke of the military attack from without. He nearly won, and possibly could have succeeded, if he had remembered his own statement, and carried on what he called the psychological dislocation of his enemies, so that they would have been ripe for destruction by the military attack.

V. MEANS TO BE USED

The means to be used by the agency requires little amplification, except that it probably should be noted that this plan makes use of the underground organizations now in existence in Russia and her satellites, and also those to be developed, for the purpose of distribution of literature and photographs.

Special items, D, include limited operations to disseminate propaganda in special ways and for unusual and specific results. It would also include the distribution of special forms of propaganda.

For instance, an F for Freedom program could be initiated along lines similar to the V for Victory plan used so successfully during World War II by the underground movements against the Nazis.

Imitation currency containing written propaganda could be scattered by agents in foreign cities. This is very effective for two reasons. First, everyone instinctively stops to pick up money. Second, as it is a crime behind the iron curtain to have foreign propaganda in one's possession, the person picking up this fictitious money will immediately drop it when he reads it, for fear of being caught with it in his possession, and the fake money is again available for some other person to pick up and repeat the process.

VI. INTEGRATION WITH OTHER AGENCIES AND WITH DEPARTMENTS

The proposed agency should be integrated with the Department of State, the Department of Defense, and with the Department of Justice. As to the first two, integration is necessary so that the propaganda agency can assist the Department of State and the Department of Defense, in carrying out their own policies and activities, with such propaganda as is needed. As to the Department of Justice, integration is essential for security reasons. Each employee should be constantly investigated for discretion and for loyalty, as any leak of information from this agency could be serious.

VII. ORGANIZATION

A. Divisions of agency: The functions of the divisions of the proposed agency probably should be explained in some detail as the mere name is not always descriptive of the work which this division would do.

A–1. Analytical: The purpose of this division is to analyze all broadcasts first, for their effectiveness, and second, for the size and type of listening audience that they develop. The activity of this division will involve cooperation with the Department of Defense, Department of Justice, and the State Department, to obtain their assistance in the determination of the size and type of the audiences and the effectiveness of the programs so the conclusions will be more accurate.

A–2. Radio division: This division will handle not only the technical side of radio broadcast, but will study the particular forms of broadcast which have the greatest appeal. In connection with this study, it will of course have to cooperate with the analytical division and it should study in great detail the format of statements and broadcasts made by the Russian and satellite governments to their own people.
